We Flew Thirty Miles 30,000 Peace Pigeons Dogs Foretell Future? Best Telephone Voice

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

Louis Blerlot, dead of heart disease at the age of sixty-four, might well have died much earlier of the same disease. He was one of the first really active engineers interested in airplane development and he was the first man who ever flew across the English Channel.

Blerlot won a prize offered by Lord Northcliffe of The London Daily Mail when he made that "incredible and desperately dangerous flight" of thirty miles. He piloted a small monoplane, equipped with a 22 horsepower engine, across the channel in a little more than half an hour. With man flying over that "vast expanse of water" some took flying seriously that had not done so before.

This happened less than twenty-seven years ago. Blerlot's death and these reminders ought to make the United States government take a very serious interest in flying. What Blerlot did with his 22 horsepower plane, flying thirty miles across the waters of the English Channel, Europe or Asia could do with planes of 1000 horsepower and more, flying across either ocean.

It was a very interesting idea, in connection with the recent Berlin Olympic games, to release 30,000 pigeons "to carry its message of peace to the world," as Chancellor Hitler began his speech of welcome. Nobody knows exactly where the pigeons went; but the wise ones, undoubtedly, flew as far as they could, rested awhile and then flew farther. No part of Europe at this time offers any very safe roosting place for a peace pigeon.

England has been reading some wonderful dog stories tending to show not only great intelligence but power to foretell future events. Sir Henry T. Holland, head of the Mission Hospital at Quetta, India, where a terrible earthquake occurred recently, had a dog which literally pulled him out of bed 32 minutes before the earthquake began, and saved his life. He supposed it was burglars and went out of doors. He was out when his house fell in.

A Royal Veterinary College expert, informed of the Quetta incident, said:

"Dogs can always sense an impending catastrophe. They can even tell what sort of weather is coming, but we still have no idea how they know."

The answer to that is they do NOT know any more than those that guess at the weather.

A London lady "was roused from her bed by her dog, Turko. She went downstairs, wandering around to see what happened. When she returned her bedroom was filled with gas from a broken pipe." Without Turko's remarkable intelligence she would have died.

One gentleman knew a dog that refused to cross condemned bridges or dangerous floors, and another knew a blind sheep dog that for the first time in its life refused to answer its master's call. It knew that an inspector, who had come to destroy the dog, was with the master.

All interesting, remarkable and important, if true. But, unfortunately, no dog predicts earthquakes or weather or knows that the gas is going to leak. Sometimes their owners quite sincerely imagine such things; more often they invent them.

What telephone girl in America has the softest, most beautiful, most easily understood voice? That question was asked in England and a Miss Cain won the competition arranged by the British post office which owns British telephones and telegraph.

The finest voice having been selected, a robot was manufactured to imitate that voice by phonographic process. Now, when you want to know the time in London, you dial "Tim" and the soft voice of Miss Cain, perfectly reproduced, tells you "at the third stroke it will be four twenty-seven and fifteen seconds—"

England's "Tim" means one more job taken by machines.

OVERPASS SINKS 2 FEET MORE

NEW DAMAGE TO $500,000 RIVERWAY PROJECT

Damaged section of the Riverway - Jamaicaway overpass dropped two feet more today, bringing the measurement of collapse since Saturday morning to a total of 11.5 feet.

Today's sagging occurred even while engineers were surveying the extent of the first damage and while motorists were hooting derisive horns at the engineers on the $500,000 structure.

Possibility that the entire overpass, including the northbound approach, which was opened a week ago, might be closed to traffic came with the new sagging.

Engineers and workmen were hastily clearing debris from the Jamaicaway in the event that this

King's Yacht Hits Bridge, 2 Injured

Athens, Aug. 31 (INS)—Near tragedy marred the vacation cruise of King Edward VIII. of England today when his yacht was involved in an accident and two rowboats loaded with sightseers were capsized before his eyes.

The accident occurred when his yacht, the Nahlin, crashed into a bridge support while attempting to negotiate Chalcis Straits off Euboea Isle. Adverse currents threw the vessel off its course. Two seamen were slightly injured by the impact.

The wash caused by escort cruisers rushing to the Nahlin's side then capsized the rowboats. All aboard were rescued, suffering no ill effects except a ducking.

Dramatic stories of the civil war in Spain were unfolded today as the American Export liner Exochorda, bearing refugees from the horrors of the Communist regime, docked at Boston.

It was difficult to obtain transportation in Jerusalem due to a strike of Jewish cab drivers who feared Arab snipers, Miss Sullivan said.

Chicago, Aug. 31 (INS)—Less than 24 hours after being told by physicians that he had tuberculosis, and on the anniversary of his mother's death, Wilmarth Ickes, 37, stepson of Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, shot and killed himself today in the home of his stepfather at suburban Winnetka.

A caretaker of the Ickes estate found the body in the corner of a second floor bedroom this morning. There was a single bullet hole behind the right ear. A revolver lay nearby.

The suicide, who lived with his wife and three children in a house adjoining the Harold Ickes' estate, was treasurer and principal owner of a printing firm here.

Members of the family said that Secretary Ickes left Washington for Chicago immediately upon being notified of the tragedy.

LANDON TO SWEEP MAINE, STATE-WIDE POLL SHOWS

WHITE, BARROWS FAR IN LEAD, G. O. P. FIGURES REVEAL

(Special to American Newspapers, Inc.)

Augusta, Me., Aug. 31—Maine is going overwhelmingly Republican in the general election, September 14, according to a state-wide poll just completed by the Republican National Committee and announced here.

Embracing returns from more than 20 per cent of all registered voters in the state, the results again recalled the old adage:

"As Maine goes, so goes the nation."

The figures forecast the following results in the presidential contest:

Governor Alfred M. Landon, 67 per cent; Franklin D. Roosevelt, 30.001 per cent. All others, 2.998 per cent.

According to officials of the Republican National Committee the poll was one of the most comprehensive ever made in any state in the union.

It was, they said, intended to ascertain an accurate test of the voting sentiment rather than to obtain a result which would show the Republican candidate far in the lead.

Therefore, the national committee officials said, the utmost importance is attached by them to the findings.

2 CONGRESS SEATS

The figures indicate that not only will Governor Landon carry the state, but also the Republican candidates for governor, United States senator and three seats in Congress will be elected by substantial majorities.

Results of the poll follow:

GOVERNOR	Votes	P.C.
Barrows (R)	41,062	70.0
DuBord (D)	17,583	29.9
All others	174	1.0
SENATOR
White (R)	33,336	61.1
Braun (D)	20,480	38.85
All others	124	0.05
CONGRESS, First District
Oliver (R)	15,286	68.5
Hamlin (D)	6,795	30.4
All others	177	1.0
SECOND DISTRICT
Smith (R)	12,589	61.6
McLean (D)	7,086	36.4
All others	745	2.0
THIRD DISTRICT
Brewster (D)	11,083	76.0
Mahew (R)	3,286	24.0
All others	48	—

The state now has two Democrats and one Republican in the house. Thus, if the poll is borne out on election day, the Democrats will lose two seats in the lower branch of Congress.

Results of the gubernatorial election in the state were:

	Votes	P.C.
Braun (D)	156,197	53.8
Apes (R)	133,414	46.0

Here are results of the present statewide poll:

	P.C.
Barrows (R)	69.9
Duberd (D)	29.1
All others	1.0

In the 1932 Presidential election a total of 293,444 votes were cast. The present poll embraced 60,167 voters from every county in the state, or 20.0 per cent.

Herewith are the findings:

PRESIDENT	Vote	P.C.
Landon	40,567	67.0
Roosevelt	10,069	30.001
All others	1,740	2.999

SIGNIFICANT VOTE

Officials saw especial significance in the remarkable poll piled up by United States Senator Wallace H. White. At the last senatorial election in 1934 the ever-popular Republican Senator Frederick Hale was reelected by the bare margin of 139,834 to 138,133 over his Democrat opponent, F. Harold Dubord.

Other results from the last election, which sent two Democrats to Congress from the nominally Republican state were:

FIRST DISTRICT	Votes	P.C.
Hamlin (D)	48,238	51.
Beedy (R)	46,635	48.
SECOND DISTRICT
Moran (D)	53,491	53.1
Dwinal (R)	46,300	46.9
THIRD DISTRICT
Brewster (R)	44,024	51.1
Utterbach (D)	41,710	48.9

Congressman Brewster of the third district, a former governor, has previously always been a huge vote getter. The present Republican trend in the state can be gauged, leaders assert, by Brewster's garnering of 76 per cent of the votes in the poll.

3 BAY STATE CITIES HAIL COLONEL KNOX

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY
Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

Aboard Knox Special Train, Aug. 31—Addressing enthusiastic crowds in Lowell, Lawrence, Haverhill and Lynn, Colonel Frank Knox, Republican nominee for Vice-President, today began a 32-state campaign tour by special train.

Other stops scheduled were Worcester, Hartford, and Bristol, Conn., before reaching Waterbury, Conn., where he will deliver a major speech about labor and unemployment tonight.

Principles of democratic government are at stake in the approaching election, Colonel Knox declared, as he voiced the personal greetings of Governor Landon to the cheering throngs.

ACCOMPANIED BY WIFE

Mrs. Knox accompanied her husband on the train, which will head west Saturday for the candidate's Labor Day address in Alma, Mich., site of Alma College, which Colonel Knox attended.

Republican state leaders motored to Lowell to greet Colonel Knox at the first stop of the special. These included John W. Haigis, nominee for governor; Leverett W. Saltonstall, nominee for lieutenant governor; Mrs. Margaret A. Green of Holyoke, national committeewoman; Mrs. Louise Williams of Taunton, vice-chairman of the Republican committee, and Judge Felix Forte of Somerville, Republican candidate for attorney-general.

TUCKERMAN ON HAND

Also present was Bayard Tuckerman of Hamilton, sportsman and candidate for the executive council, who was last at the Lowell depot in 1924, when he greeted a guest who is now King Edward of England.

"Landon and the Republican party stand for free Americans and free enterprise in America," Colonel Knox said at Lowell, making his speech from the observation platform of the train during a 10-minute stop.

Congresswoman Edith Nourse Rogers introduced Mrs. Knox.

At Lawrence, Colonel Knox responded to the crowd's acclaim by stating his expectation that they would later have a chance to see Governor Landon; of whom he said:

"He is a great American, a straight thinker and a straight shooter, and by his record has proved himself a faithful conservator of the people's money."

At his Haverhill stop, branding the Raw Deal a total failure, he declared the number of unemployed to be just as great as in 1932.

5000 IN LYNN CROWD

A crowd, estimated by police at 5000, jammed the Lynn terminal when the train arrived at 10:50.

In the absence of Mayor J. Fred Manning, Stuart A. Tarr, president of the city council, welcomed the candidate.

Haigis introduced Colonel Knox, who in turn had been greeted by Mrs. Frank Richardson, president of the Women's Republican Club of Lynn. Mrs. Knox made a short speech.

Predicting a G. O. P. sweep in November, Colonel Knox said in part:

"New England has many problems to solve. An understanding light will be thrown on them when we arrive in Washington.

"Governorship Landon has the same sense of trusteeship that Calvin Coolidge had. You will find him a square man and a straight shooter.

"Calvin Coolidge frequently referred to high taxes and depression, and low taxes and prosperity. Administration leaders have failed to see the failure they have built up in high taxes.

"National recovery will come through the application of sound laws."

The special will head back to Massachusetts tomorrow for a 25-minute stop in Attleboro and then go to Providence, R. I., where the Colonel will be the guest speaker at a big Republican dinner.

The train of three cars is due in Attleboro at 1:05 p. m., daylight saving time, and will leave for Providence at 2:20 p. m.

MARTIN TO BOARD TRAIN

Congressman Joseph Martin, Jr., Landon eastern campaign manager, will board the special in Connecticut to introduce Colonel Knox to the people of Attleboro, fellow townsmen, and will attend the Providence dinner. Later Martin will rejoin the train for the wind-up of the trip in Maine.

On Wednesday, the following communities will be visited: Worcester, Springfield, Northampton, Greenfield, North Adams, Pittsfield. Fitchburg will be the sole Massachusetts stopping place on Thursday enroute to Portsmouth and Dover, N. H., and cities in Maine.

SLOT RACKET NETS MAINE HARVEST

Augusta, Me., Aug. 31—Supported by a law legalizing "games of skill," which Gov. Louis J. Brann signed on March 20, 1935, slot machine operators are reaping a golden harvest in Maine.

From state department land legislative records, from police files, from the operators themselves, com disclosure which tl la startling story of gambling from one end t the state to the other, under the benediction of this law.

The arrest of a man for alleged drunken driving, with a loaded revolver in his pocket and two illegal slot machines in his car—one slot machine with a state license tacked to its side—is the latest in a long series of events which make this story unique.

ONLY 1113 LICENSED

Official assertions on record in the State House reveal there are some 10,000 slot machines in Maine.

Other records show that only 1113 of these machines are licensed under the law.

And an official statement of the attorney general brands virtually all these machines, both licensed and unlicensed, as outside of the pale of the law.

And still these machines can be found on every side, in grocery stores, inns, beer parlors, illegal dispensaries of bootleg liquor, and other public places, where men, women and children are permitted to play them, Sundays included.

Some cities are free of these machines, notably Lewiston, where police have seized every one that has come to their attention by personal observation of officers, or by complaint.

But even in these localities, the distributors have boldly come forward to launch fights in the highest courts for repossession of machines which they claim do not pay money.

The distributors of these machines in Maine—some of them representatives of large-scale operators residing in the Boston area—vigorously and in organized fashion fought the passage of the legalizing statute, as will be shown from the records.

One distributor was found last Friday making his round for collections from 62 machines in Old Orchard and Ferry Beach, and besides these he has machines as far east as Bar Harbor.

LIQUOR GIRLS TO PLAY

Not content with ordinary business, some of the distributors find a way to induce factory girls to play their machines.

Not content with the quarters, dimes and the nickels of adults, the "skill" consists of the use of boys of grammar and high school age.

The duties have been complained of for stealing, to play these machines —the games of skill, state-licensed, in which the "skill" consists of snapping the ball out easy or hard. Others have been arrested for breaking into places to steal the machines and the money.

And behind the operation of some of these devices, from end to end of the state, the police admit they see the hand of racketeers who once engaged in the running of alcohol.

In county political campaigns the machines are figuring in charges of "protection for so-much a week."

STATE GETS LITTLE

The legalizing statute has been, as will be shown, a potent argument of distributors in inducing storekeepers to set up machines, and the business with its sinister implications goes on despite an official opinion that this statute runs counter to the general gambling law that has been on the books for years.

Out of the legalization, the state reaps but little, and the operators much.

This series will disclose how much some of the operators are making, how they split their proceeds, who the operators are and, in some cases, their records.

Here and there throughout the state, the authorities of some places smash the machines, as in Lewiston and in Cumberland County. But the officials of scores of cities and towns find themselves balked by the statute.

The grinding of gears as the slot machines swallow the nickels can be heard in innumerable places, from daybreak to midnight, every day in the week, even drowning out the chime of the church bells on Sundays. Almost endlessly the grinding of nickels continues with the paying of meager "jackpots" to the luckiest players.

What are the players' chances of winning, and how the players are tricked, both by the ever-honed standup machines with their levels and the new-games of skill in endless and ever-varied variety, will be revealed in this series.

(Read tomorrow's Boston Evening American for the continuation of this story how semi-legalized slot machines are reaping a harvest in Maine).

The Great Game Of Politics

(Reprinted by special permission of Frank R. Kent and the McNaught Syndicate.)

By FRANK R. KENT

Since the Landon nomination and the comparatively complete cohesion of the anti-New Deal forces behind him, the Roosevelt managers have searched, naturally, for disparaging data. They have been quite thorough about the job, too, but it has been somewhat disappointing to them to find so little vulnerable in Landon's personal and political record.

In fact, so barren have been the results of the search that the belittling brigade is reduced to two or three things, none of which seem particularly effective and to all of which there seem fairly complete answers. After these have been exhausted it is possible the campaign on both sides may get above personalities and trivialities and rest upon a relatively high plane.

One of the points being stressed against Governor Landon is his labor record. Some of the more emotional of the New Deal laborites eagerly seized upon a report garnered by the little poison squad in Topeka and rushed into print with the charge that Mr. Landon as governor a year or so ago had called out the Kansas militia at the request of mine owners and had thus broken a strike. Recitation of this frightful crime was expected to blow Mr. Landon sky high.

It failed to do that for a number of reasons, one of which is that it happens not to be true. The answer from the Landon side appears convincing. In brief, it is this: Mr. Landon did call out the militia, but distinctly did not do so upon the request of the mine owners. It was at the request of the sheriff and state's attorney of the county concerned.

They pointed to uncontrollable disorder and asked for the troops in order to prevent loss of life. The governor sent the militia to the spot with instructions to stop the fighting but to interfere with neither speaking nor meetings. Under the circumstances, what else decent governor could have done does not appear.

Another matter which has caused considerable commotion with the more fluffy of the journalistic supporters of the President is the discovery that Governor Landon's speeches in 1933, and even 1935, disclose that he was not at all anti-New Deal in those days, that he expressed the idea that dictatorship was possible in this country and had, in fact, commendation for various administration policies.

Diligently digging out these utterances of the past, they excitedly contrast them with his speech of acceptance and the Republican platform to show the shocking inconsistency of the governor. Perhaps they are right and the governor's words can properly be used in this way, though those who so read them do seem to strain considerably to make their point.

However, consistency seems to be a strange thing for Mr. Roosevelt's supporters to insist upon in view of the fact that there has not been in American politics a greater contrast than exists between his words and his deeds.

Also, there is a certain class of New Dealers who harp continuously on the contention that Gov. Landon is the creature of Mr. Hearst. This does not seem very smart. Aside from the fact that the support of a man with as many newspapers, magazines, microphones, moving picture companies and radio stations as Mr. Hearst would hardly be regarded as undesirable by any candidate in his senses, there are at least two answers to the allegation. One is that it is not so. Mr. Landon was not brought out by Mr. Hearst, was not nominated by Mr. Hearst and is under no obligations to Mr. Hearst.

Mr. Hearst early began supporting him in his customary fashion—for example, in the way he supported Mr. Garner five years ago—because he was strongly opposed to Mr. Roosevelt and Gov. Landon seemed to him, as he did to many others, the best available man.

The other answer is even more complete. It rests upon the generally conceded fact that Mr. Roosevelt certainly would not now be in the White House if it had not been for Mr. Hearst. No one who recalls the facts about the Chicago convention of 1932 will dispute that for a moment, because it was quite clear that, but for Mr. Hearst, the alliance against Mr. Roosevelt would have been with either Ritchie or Baker.

It was Mr. Hearst, who, by building up Mr. Garner as a Presidential candidate, secured control of the California delegation, and it was the Hearst influence which consummated the deal by which the California vote was switched to Roosevelt, and Garner was given the Vice-Presidential nomination. Without that deal Mr. Roosevelt could not have been nominated and every politician knows it.

Those facts were printed in nearly every paper in the country at the time. No one has ever successfully questioned them. In addition, Mr. Hearst supported Mr. Roosevelt through the campaign and on occasional occasions visited him in the White House. So have his editors and representatives.

Mr. Roosevelt in various ways before his nomination and after his election showed himself not only glad of the Hearst support, but eager for it. In the end it was Mr. Hearst who broke away from Mr. Roosevelt, not Mr. Roosevelt who broke away from Mr. Hearst.

Considering these things, it takes quite a little effrontery to harp on Mr. Hearst as a Landon liability. It seems, if anything, slightly more absurd than to work up a sweat over the Kansas labor incident or the old Landon speeches. Gov. Landon's friends regard both answers to all three as adequate.

Undecided Voter Key To Election, Poll Reveals

By King Features Syndicate

New York, Aug. 31—Interest in the presendittial election mounted high today as statisticians of the Crossley poll began analysis of first totals of ballots, gathered by the personal-interview method in every congressional district in the United States.

Voters, questioned upon a carefully worked out statistical plan by which each group is given its proRata representation an death state's asample votes are proportionate to its vote in the electoral college, were found on initial returns to have registered this outstanding fact about the national situation.

There is a heavier percentage of "doubtfuls," of voters of both sexes and all ages who have not, at this stage, made up their minds, than has ever known before.

TO DECIDE ELECTION

Moreover, as the hundreds of district totals were rushed by the clerks in the New York headquarters of Crossley, the impression was clear that what is at present the doubtful vote will be the "pivotal," or determining vote in deciding the lection of November 3.

The undecided vote fell into two categories: One large list of voters declined to state whether they preferred Landon, andon or a third party candidate; another, almost equally large and in some states even larger, listed themselves for Roosevelt or for andon with the proviso that the choice was not final and that when election day come they might change their minds.

In state after state, the initial returns—which still, on the statistical basis by which the Crossley poll is compiled, are not to be regarded as "seattering" but are calculated to be a true cross-section of the whole—showed this pivotal or undecided, vote to be easily large enough to swing the election if a heavy percentage of it went to either leading candidate.

THOUSANDS GET OTE

The work of gathering the ballots was being done by several thousand trained investigators of Crossley, Inc., leading organization in the field of business research. Each investigator profited in his work through his past experience in the Crossley organization for merchandising concerns and tabulating, day by day for several years past, this "pulling power" of various features in radio advertising.

The same methods which won for the Crossley concern the Harvard award for outstanding research, were transferred to the task of learning the voters' intentions.

Results further indicated the advantage of starting "from scratch" only two days before election day, as the totals are not "weighted" by sample votes collected prior to the nominations or the start of the actual campaign.

TO AVERT ERRORS

The figures of the Crossley poll are entirely fresh, reflecting how the nation stands at the present time.

As a further safeguard against possibility of error, it was declared that the first actual percentages, in numerical form, would be published in next Sunday's columns, with the general trend of the findings made known each day of this week.

The all-important fact clerly determined so far is that doubt among the voters is the important phenomena, indicating by inference that the results rest, to an exceptional degree, upon the affections of the campaigning from this date on. It's the "pivotal" voter who will choose the next President.

SMITH SILENT ON DEAL TALKS

New York, Aug. 31 (INS)—Former Governor Alfred E. Smith today maintained a noncommittal attitude in the face of recurring reports that he will make two or three speeches in October against the New Deal and President Roosevelt.

Close friends of Smith do not doubt he will make the speeches. But they adopted a "don't quote me" attitude, emphasizing that the only one talking for Al Smith these days is Al Smith. And he is keeping his own counsel.

They pointed out that when Former Governor Joseph B. Ely of Massachusetts, another Jeffersonian Democrat, announced some time ago that Smith would take the stump against Roosevelt, Al promptly repudiated the announcement.

It was said at Smith's offices in the Empire State Building today that he has made no commitments or speaking dates—as yet.

ROMEO Premiere LAUDED

MISS SHEARER "MAGNIFICENT"

By ANN MARSTERS

There were flood lights and searchlights and a crowd of people on the sidewalk before the Colonial Theater.

The occasion was the New England premiere of "Romeo and Juliet"—a play in poetry written by one William Shakespeare who seems to be quite the rage in Hollywood these days.

The crowd on the sidewalk was there to watch the "important" people alight from their limousines—and their taxicabs and disappear into the inner lobby.

It was almost like a real Hollywood premiere—except that there were a few less people and Romeo and Juliet did not appear in the persons of Norma Shearer and Leslie Howard.

Brother There

Anyway—Norma Shearer's brother, Douglas Shearer, was there. The resemblance between brother and sister is so distinct that, if you happened to be looking for Norma's brother it would have been quite possible to pick him out in the audience.

The audience, by the way, was tremendous. It filled the Colonial theater way up to its rafters. And when the play was over, it united in applause for the very beautiful production—and there were many handkerchiefs that were damp with grief-tears over the tragic death of the lovers.

Afterwards, in the lobby, we met Mr. Shearer. He is recording director of the film, and he is here to supervise the installment of the new sound equipment.

Those who heard Romeo and Juliet last evening, heard a sound mechanism that is at the peak of its perfection. Not a word, not even a breath, was lost in reproduction.

"They didn't seem like canned voices did they?" said Shearer. "We have been working for a long time on this advanced design of reproducing equipment for the theater.

"There is still more to be done—but for the time being it is the most nearly perfect thing that the movies have yet known.

"Marvelous"

"It brings out words and tones and voices so that the action seems more like that in a play than in a movie. The actors and actresses become more definite personalities and their emotions ring more true."

We asked him, then, what he thought of his sister as Juliet, and he said:

"I think that when she got into the more serious part of the play, she was marvelous. Perhaps I'm hypercritical, but I thought, at the very first, that she was a little bit too coy and childlike."

"Grown-Up" Play

But he forgave her for that when he told himself that Juliet was supposed to be a mere child—and a very shy one, too, until she fell in love with Romeo.

"All in all," he went on, "I think she gave a magnificent performance."

She did indeed—and so did Leslie Howard as a manly and sensitive and poetic Romeo. John Barrymore, slightly pop-eyed in most of his scenes, was considered by Shearer, and undoubtedly by many others, to be a very splendid Mercutio.

"It was a grown-up Romeo and Juliet," said Douglas Shearer, but after all—why not? I think the drama of the pic. can be intensified by taking C.. lovers out of the childhood class.

"And I'm sure," he added, "that Shakespeare would have loved the performance we saw here."

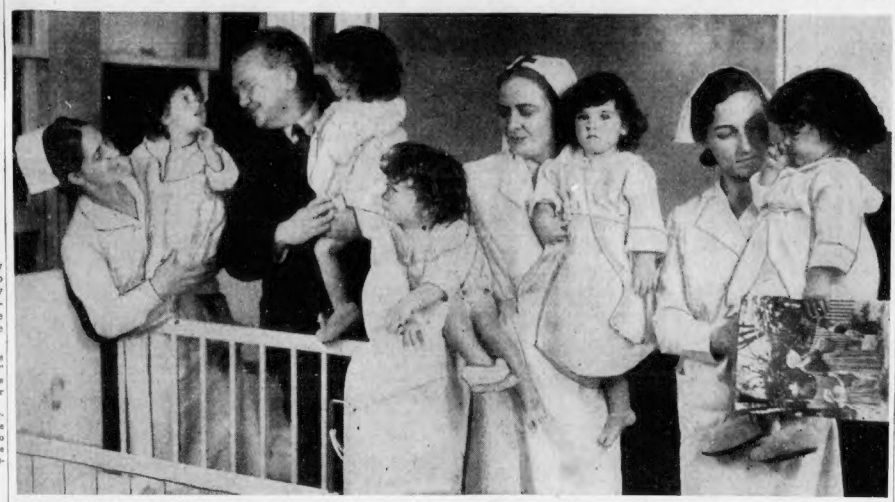
A Reunion in Callander Not in the Scenario



When Jean Hersholt and Dorothy Peterson arrived in Callander, Ont., to make their second movie, "Reunion," with the famous Dionne quintuplets, they received a great welcome from the infants. Two of the cute sisters are seen in Miss Peterson's arms, while a third is flirting with Hersholt, much to the surprise of still another he is holding. The fifth quin, at the right, is thoughtfully speculating on such goings on, feeling her nose with a tiny hand to help her concentrate.

Callander, Ont., Aug. 31—Everybody is idle in these parts except the Dionne quintuplets and the 7000 tourists who flocked to Dafoe hospital for a peek at them.

The Hollywood actors, here to play their parts in "Reunion," the new quintuplet movie, sat around the hotel lobby in North Bay all morning.

In the afternoon, Director Norman Taurog had his mechanical force put on a special show for the actors in the local motion picture house.

Jean Hersholt, Dorothy Peterson, Rochelle Hudson and Bob Kent went and applauded the affair loudly.

Some Fish

Which goes to show what a dull day in the Callander-North Bay sector can do for one.

Most of the photographers went fishing in the lake.

The weather was bad again, although the sun came out long enough to permit the quins to have their usual play hour for the public. It was somewhat abbreviated.

Annette had got over her sniffles, and Emilie had got over her "mad."

Nobody knows how long the Hollywood troupe will be on location. Every day spent by the 40 actors, mechanicians and property men means thousands of dollars lost, but there's nothing else to do.

Dr. Dafoe is arbitrator of all activity. And Taurog realizes if anything should happen to one of the kids, his company would be the big loser.

Await Jobs

Natives are still awaiting the big day, when the company will hire sixty extras for one hour's shooting. The date is indefinite.

Already the company has many Canadians on the payroll, most of them doing nothing, in order to comply with the immigration laws. The men brought on from Hollywood do the work.

The tourist trade shows no signs of falling off, late as it is for this North Country.

There are thousands of them. The natives of Callander make a pretty penny off them. Callander is one of the few towns in Ontario where there is nobody on the dole.

BOY Admits $10 MURDER

BOASTS HE'LL CHEAT CHAIR

Chicago, Aug. 31 (INS)—Death in the electric chair loomed for a 15-year-old choir boy here today.

The boy is Roland Munroe. He calmly confessed beating to death Mrs. Agnes Roffeis, 63-year-old invalid widow.

The serenity with which the red-haired boy accepted his predicament amazed authorities. An avid reader of detective fiction, he apparently was more perturbed over the solution of his "perfect crime" than he was at the murder charge.

"I didn't really mean to go so far as to kill her," he said. "But I don't think they'll convict me because I'm too young. They wouldn't send a 15-year-old boy to the electric chair."

The state, however, will likely ask the death penalty, Assistant State's Attorney Richard Devine said.

The problem of prosecution and punishment will be taken up after the coroner's inquest today. The prosecutor pointed out that there is no doubt of the jurisdiction of the criminal court to try the youth for murder and impose the death penalty.

Pending results of psychiatric examinations, Devine said, the plan is to obtain an indictment.

Apparently unable to realize the enormity of his crime, Roland, a handsome boy with wavy red hair, slept soundly in his jail cell last night.

He Confesses

He was asleep yesterday when police arrested him in his home. At first he denied knowledge of the murder of the elderly woman, for whom he occasionally ran errands and did odd jobs.

Then he said the woman "died partly by accident and I killed her because I didn't want to see her suffer."

Finally, after being tripped up in his own statements, the choir boy told police how he went to the basement of Mrs. Roffeis' home Saturday and used a small hammer to straighten out a key for her. The widow showed him some pieces of cheap jewelry, discussing possible sale of the articles, worth, perhaps, $10.

While walking about, the widow stumbled and fell, Roland said.

"While she lay there the thought entered my mind that if I knocked her out I could get all the jewelry and have the money for myself," he confessed, police said.

"I grabbed the hammer and hit her twice on the head. The third time I missed and the hammer hit the floor and the handle broke. Then I took her cane and hit her five or six times.

"She didn't move, but I didn't think she was dead, so I got some wire and intended to tie her hands so she couldn't use the telephone. I put some of the wire round her neck."

He described how he wiped the aged woman's face "because I can't stand blood."

He sold the jewelry to an old gold dealer and then returned home.

ATHLETIC BEAUTIES

48 Seek Miss America Title

Atlantic City, N. J., Aug. 31 (INS)—Taller, heavier, more athletic, yet more feminine curves, and a capable singer and dancer, is the composite picture of the new ideal American girl, according to the mass of data piling up today in beauty pageant headquarters here.

Out of 48 entries from 30 states, all seeking the title of Miss America 1936 in the showmen's variety jubilee, September 8 to 14, 25 have sent in their specification. (In other cases the elimination contests are still under way.). The 25 show unmistakably that:

All have athletic tastes.

Brunettes predominate.

All swim. In this beauty pageant bathing suits will be more than ornamental.

All hope appeared in school theatricals. Several have entertained professionally.

All want stage, movie or radio careers.

Almost all sing, mostly blues or torch songs.

Their average height and weight are greater than in the past.

Their pictures show that the flat-bosomed boyish figure sought a few years ago in the dieting era is no longer fashionable. They show decidedly feminine curves.

And only one professes that her hobby is cooking.

PRESS FREEDOM MENACED, SEATTLE BUSINESS FEARS

(The following is reprinted by courtesy of the New York Times).
By RUSSELL B. PORTER
Special to the New York Times

Seattle, Aug. 31—Organized business, industry and finance in this city are solidly behind William Randolph Hearst in the strike of the American Newspaper Guild which has forced the publisher's morning newspaper, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, to suspend publication since August 13.

They insist that the paramount issue in the Guild strike, explaining the widespread support it has from organized labor, is an attempt to impose a closed shop on the editorial department of the P.-I.

DOOM FREE PRESS

If that were accomplished, it is contended by business leaders, it would mean that the union would control the editorial policies of the press and the general public could not obtain impartial news reports of labor disputes.

The interests of organized business here are represented by the Industrial Council of Washington, Inc., and by the Seattle Chamber of Commerce.

In a statement prepared in response to questions by this reporter, Herman Rose, manager of the Industrial Council, denies that the Industrial Council is trying to crush the labor movement, as charged by union leaders.

Its purpose, he said, is merely to resist "the unreasonable demands of certain factions of organized labor, headed by wilful leaders."

"For the past three years," he continues, "a determined drive has been under way to force the principle of the closed shop on all lines of business, trade and industry.

"This drive is directed in part from San Francisco and in part from Seattle union headquarters

BLAMES RADICALS

"In common with other parts of the Pacific Coast, Seattle's water-front industries and maritime trades were thrown into a state of almost total paralysis by the activities of the radically-controlled Maritime Federation of the Pacific, headed by Harry Bridges.

"Following almost immediately upon the heels of this, a large number of other industries and businesses in Seattle were thrown into a state of confusion and turmoil and in some cases total paralysis by the activity of the Joint Teamsters' Council under the leadership of one Dave Beck, a resident of Seattle.

"Beck is not only president of this council but is likewise vice-president of the International Teamsters' Union.

"To meet this determined threat on the part of organized labor, the business and industrial leaders of Seattle first organized a committee of 500, out of which grew a permanent organization known as the Industrial Council of Washington, Seattle division.

MAYOR AIDS UNION

"The right of wage-earners to organize is in no sense challenged by any member of the Industrial Council or by the council itself.

"We simply take the position that the right to organize does not involve the right to coerce and intimidate either the employers or working men who, of their own choice, do not care to associate with organized labor.

"Our predicament here is rendered more difficult by reason of the league between the duly elected mayor of our city and the wilful forces of organized labor, where chief interest seems to be to exploit the working man, the industrialist and the consuming public.

"The mayor has openly stated his intention to place the full force of his administration behind not only organized labor, but the individual, who, over a number of years, has built up a virtual dictatorship over the right of men to work in many of our important and vital industries.

"This man, Dave Beck, head of the Teamsters' Union, has succeeded in negotiating contracts with employers in the brewing, dairy, laundry, dry cleaning and other industries.

"Under these contracts, in return for turning over to Beck control of employment, he, through his powerful union, agrees to maintain prices and shut out competition.

"Naturally, his political as well as his economic power is considerable, and, following the city election this spring, Mayor Dore, who was elected by a plurality of 6000 votes, stated that Beck was responsible for his political success; that he owed him a debt and would pay that debt.

OPPOSES RACKETS

"Seattle has been the victim of a constant agitation in almost every line of industry and commerce.

"While this agitation originated in the unions directly affected, back behind the scenes in all of this industrial strife stood the Teamsters' Union as the most powerful and effective agency.

"Beck dominates and controls the Central Labor Council, and, he in the council, brings the full pressure of organized labor's economic force to bear on both employers and employes as well as the general public in enforcing his demands.

"The most recent demonstration of Beck's power and of Mayor Dore's determination to fulfill his political obligation to Beck is the strike against the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

"This is a Hearst-owned newspaper, and, like other publications so owned, has been an outspoken critic of racketeering and Radical activity, and has incurred the enmity and displeasure of all elements in racketeering and devoted to Radical action.

"No community without a morning newspaper is in a very healthy condition, especially when that newspaper's publication is suspended through mob activity and violence and disorder.

"The Industrial Council has sought the cooperation of both local and state officials in preserving law and order, but its efforts have not been proved of any avail.

NATIONAL TOPIC

"Following the Post-Intelligencer strike, which directly affected so vast a number of people, that paper having almost 100,000 subscribers, we were literally deluged with demands from individual citizens for some action.

"The situation that prevails in Seattle has attracted nation-wide attention, because the closing of the Post-Intelligencer is one of the few instances in which a metropolitan newspaper has been silenced by the activity of a factious minority.

"While the Post-Intelligencer strike is the most brazen of the acts of this wilful group, it is but a symptom of a condition that affects all trade and industry, and goes to the very vitals of American principles of free enterprise.

"The Industrial Council and the Seattle business community, backed by the decent citizenship, is waging a valiant fight to preserve government under the law as opposed to mob violence and detrimental control by a wilful and organized minority."

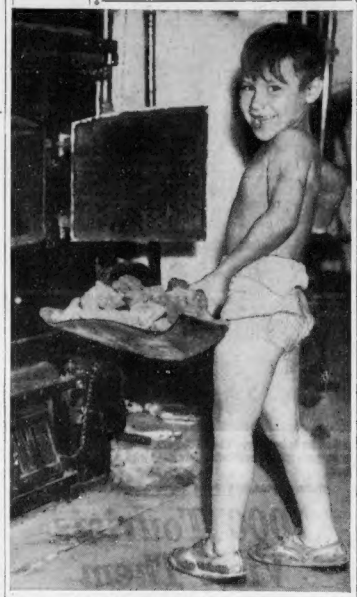
'Strong Man' Stokes to Train

Five-Year-Old Sandow To Be Fighter



Five-year-old William Earl Hutchins, of Hemenway street, Boston, stoking the furnace by way of pastime and to keep his muscles in trim. He's the "strong man" of his neighborhood.

BACK BAY BOY AFTER TITLE

James J. Braddock, world's heavyweight "champ-een" has a real title contender in the person of William Earl Hutchins of Hemenway street, Boston.

Mind you, Master Hutchins has lived a mere span of five years. But don't let that fact delude you.

Hutchins is out to get Braddock, in his own words, and has some mighty might in back of his statement.

Trains Seriously

The lad first attracted attention when at the age of 20 months he was pulling the cart carrying his seven-year-old brother, Leonard, all over the yard. Not to speak of wheeling his three-year-old sister, Dorothy Pauline, in a baby carriage.

But that is small fry, now, to "Bill," as he is fearfully addressed by his playmates. Bill has left those baby days behind.

Now he takes his training seriously in the form of "putting out the barrels" for his Dad, who is superintendent of an apartment building on Hemenway street.

And in the winter season, he heaves a mean shovel of coal, to be helpful to his parent.

Included in his acrobatic program, is lifting dumb-bells, like you, for instance, would pick up a paperweight. And then, of course, there is a tussle or two in preparation for that sometime-in-the-future bout with the champ-een Braddock.

"He'll be champion no more, after I meet him," says the confident Mr. Hutchins.

Bill weighs 70 pounds. None of it is fat. It's all hard muscle.

Kids Afraid

Speaking of that purported fight, Bill has no sparring partners left. He's beaten all the kids in the neighborhood. And none of them seem too anxious to offer themselves as candidates for a second time as sparring partner for the lucky Bill.

Even the fellows in their 'teens look away when anything of the nature is suggested.

How did the little fellow get this way?

Well, in the first place, he was born with an advantage of 11 pounds. And secondly, his mother had two brothers who hit the 200 mark and took up boxing in a casual fashion. Never too seriously.

Mother, herself, weighs 168 pounds, as does Dad.

But with this as a starter, Bill eats the right things. None of those sissy delicacies for him. It's raw steaks and such that feature Bill's menu.

New England's Greatest Evening Newspaper

Strike Economics

Editor & Publisher prints the following editorial in its current issue:

INEVITABLE as a strike by-product is hardship to people directly concerned with none of the issues. A shutdown of any industrial plant must cause idleness and loss all along the line its products follow to market, but it is seldom that a strike shuts down a newspaper for more than a day or two.

The Guild's Post-Intelligencer strike, now in its second week, is unique in that, and several other respects.

Ostensibly, it was called because two experienced men had been discharged. It was called after machinery had been set in motion to judge whether they had been discharged for Guild activity, or whether their separation from the payroll was for other causes.

It was called on a snap vote, without the sanction of international headquarters and without consultation with other newspaper unions.

It has been continued with the backing of unions without newspaper association, and over the protest of unions under contract to the Seattle newspapers.

* * *

MORE than 600 people, not members of the Guild, many of them members of no union, have been barred forcibly from their normal employment; other employes whose work is outside the plant have lost their daily work and bread.

Nearly half a million people have been deprived of news service they have had daily for more than 60 years, for the Guild's publication is a mere propaganda sheet, not fit to be reckoned a patch on a newspaper's pants. Advertisers have been cut off from one of their main channels to market.

* * *

Put these considerations on the scale opposite the Guild's own values. Two skilled men were discharged. One is a first class press photographer, the other a dramatic critic of more than local prestige. Either, in the absence of the Guild recognition issue, might by this time have obtained a better job than their P.-I. employment.

Granting that a principle was at stake in their discharge, the price for vindication of the principle is appallingly higher than even the reckless Guild was prepared to demand.

There was, in fact, no principle at stake in this strike. The strike can establish none, nor can it supply the answer to the question that has already been placed before the labor relations board.

* * *

STRIPPED of all pretense, this destroying strike was not called to regain the lost jobs, nor to safeguard other Guild members from discharge.

It resulted from an unholy combination of the Guild's ambition to be "doing something," preferably to the embarrassment of W. R. Hearst, with the lust for power of local politicians and labor leaders whose games have been fought by Hearst and the Post-Intelligencer.

The Guild would have been content with one of its shouting campaigns, without the unexpected aid of Dave Beck's strong-arm squad, for its Seattle strike was no better prepared than its futile demonstrations in Newark, Lorain, and Milwaukee.

It can't win in Seattle, either, no matter what the immediate outcome of the strike or the labor board litigation, for it has shown itself as a force with which there can be no compromise.

This nondescript union, devoted to class warfare and with neither discipline nor responsibility, has to be eliminated from the newspaper structure in the interests of the public, the well-being of thousands who depend upon newspapers for their living, and the people who assume the normal risks of publishing.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

'TOO MANY FOOL WALKERS,' SAYS GOODWIN

Attacking persons who criticized him for not educating pedestrians, Motor Vehicle Registrar Frank A. Goodwin declared today that there "is such a large assortment of fools" in the world that he would not care to tackle such a problem.

The criticisms were directed against Goodwin for his order which requires that any driver whose car injures a pedestrian must undergo a new driving test—at $1 per test.

4,000,000 WALKERS

It came close on the heels of his previous order, also bitterly criticized, that all drivers over 65 years who seek license renewals shall take a new driving examination.

Said Goodwin today:

"There are 4,000,000 pedestrians in Massachusetts, including babies in baby carriages, who are an example of the persons to be educated against careless drivers and any one who advocates educating these people instead of the drivers is not familiar with the task.

"Among the pedestrians we have old, young, dead, blind and halt; we have drunks, absent-minded people and a large assortment of fools, and if anybody is to be picked out to educate these people I refuse to take the job.

ONLY 1,000,000 DRIVE

"I have trouble enough trying to educate a large percentage of one million drivers who are supposed to be the select group.

"Under the present law the pedestrian has the right of way and the burden is on the driver of the car not to hit him. Even now the operators of motor vehicles kill 500 persons and injure 15,000 helpless pedestrians a year in Massachusetts.

"If the million drivers ever get the idea that they have the right of way over pedestrians, we would have to build many more hospitals and the undertakers would get out of the red."

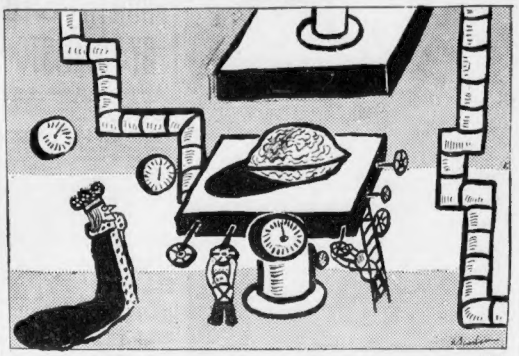
GULLIBLE'S TRAVAILS

By Uncle Samuel Gullible



"UNCLE SAMUEL GULLIBLE," said the King of LAPUTA to me one day as he sat in the palace yard cracking hickory nuts, "I want you to meet my Prime Minister."

With this the King cracked another nut. He was very fond of nuts.

The King's nutcracker was admirably ingenious.

It was a large pile driver, I calculated about 136 feet tall. It was operated by steam and the weight was about the heft of 8,000 pounds. The King would place a nut on a large steel block. When the nut was in position the signal would be flashed by electricity to the Chief Engineer, who set the apparatus in motion.

Often I observed that the nut would be ground to powder by the descending weight, but this did not seem to disturb the King.

When this happened, the King always laughed.

* * *

ON this occasion he had cracked only a few nuts, consuming not more than six or seven hours in the process, when the Prime Minister draw near.

Taking me cordially by the hand, the King formally presented me to his Prime Minister, a clerical looking gentleman who always seemed to be going around in a trance.

"Uncle Samuel Gullible," said the King, "my Prime Minister is the smartest man in the world. When not engaged in negotiating tariff treaties to ruin our commerce and put the foreign competitor one up on our farmers, he employs himself upon the project of extracting coolness from cucumbers. This he puts into hermetically-sealed jars, and in hot weather he air-conditions the palace, thus making for the more abundant life."

"What are his views on the tariff?" I asked.

"Oh," replied the King, nonchalantly, "the same as those of John C. Calhoun."

* * *

ONE day as the King of LAPUTA and I were taking a walk near the palace I chanced to ask him about a queer, lopsided building in course of construction not far distant.

"What is that?" I asked.

"Oh, that," replied the King, "is our new three billion dollar sane asylum."

"Sane asylum!" exclaimed I in some surprise.

"Yes," answered the King, sadly, "some of our poor unfortunate people are hopelessly sane. Indeed, at the last election, some of them broke out of their straight-jackets and voted for an elephant. However, we shall see that they don't do that trick again."

"How will you prevent it?" I asked.

"Why, very simply," replied the King. "I directed the Particularly Wasteful Administration to build a new sane asylum. Now we just lock people up when they show signs of sanity."

"But the new building is crooked," I replied. "No two sides are alike, and the cellar is on the roof."

"The very latest style of architecture in the Land of Appalling Piffle United to Asininity," replied the King.

POLICE BALK RED INVASION

A strong police guard was spread around the Marine Firemen's union, 132 Broad street, today following a report that two truckloads of New York Communist hoodlums were being rushed to seize control by violence of the Boston union.

The police radical squad was reinforced by reserve officers, as it was later reported the radical thugs had arrived from Cooper square, New York Red meeting place.

Information of the threatening raid was received last night by John Mogan, business agent of the firemen's union, who immediately called the police.

In recent union elections, a Communistic bloc received a share of the votes, but a Red demand for power in the organization was flatly denied. Enraged local Reds are believed to have appealed to New York for aid in seizing power by force.

Fear of violence on the waterfront was expressed by the radical squad and by officers of the union.

ENGINEERS BAMED

Eugene C. Hultman, chairman of the Metropolitan District Commission, sighted at the overpass today, but he hastened to explain that he was not there on official business.

Engineering blunders and skimping on costs were blamed today for collapse of the overpass—with engineers predicting that repairs will eventually cost more than a good job in the first place would have f.figured.

If engineers had made proper soundings, they would have discovered that pilings were necessary to support the overpass-approach foundations as well as the bridge itself, it was charged.

As a result of the cave-in, it will now be necessary to excavate and lay a concrete base 10 feet thick in order to afford proper support for the roadway, it was claimed.

ALL SHIFT BLAME

This and the construction of a retaining wall to prevent earth used for fill from sliding into Muddy river, will cost more than soundings and pilings would have cost, according to the engineers.

Federal and State officials connected with the overpass construction were still juggling responsibility today for the cave-in. Meanwhile, the dedication exercises, which were to have been conducted at 5:30 p. m. today, with Governor Curley officiating, are off indefinitely.

Today a conference on the overpass was called by State Public Works Commissioner William F. Callahan, state engineers attending.

U. S. WARNS REDS, REBELS 'STOP FIRING ON SHIPS'

launched three attacks on the destroyer. Each time it unleashed bombs. Whether the ship was a government or insurgent plane could not be ascertained, Alvis reported.

The Kane flew the American flag at her foremasthead and another was laid out horizontally over her well deck, the American officer said. The bombing, Alvis declared, was carried out with careful deliberation despite this display of the flag and the obvious American design of the destroyer.

HINT A "MAINE INCIDENT"

The question was raised unofficially as to whether one side in the bitter fighting might be attempting to create another battleship Maine "incident" in a bold attempt to force American intervention.

The American commander's account of the bombing as radioed to Washington, follows:

"At 4:10 p. m. August 30, at 36 degrees, 33 minutes north, 7 degrees, 35 minutes west, approximately forty miles off the Spanish coast, an unidentified trimotored, low-winged monoplane flew over the Kane and dropped two bombs which exploded near the vessel.

"The Kane, which was flying the American flag at her foremast head and in addition had an American ensign horizontal on top of the well deck awning, increased her speed to maneuver away from the plane.

"At 4:25 the plane again flew over the Kane and dropped a third bomb. At 4:26 the Kane's anti-aircraft gun fired two rounds in the direction of the plane.

SHIP FIRES 9 TIMES

"At 4:32 the plane again flew over the Kane and dropped three more bombs, making a total of six, none of which struck the Kane or caused any damage to her. The Kane's anti-aircraft gun fired nine rounds in the direction of the plane during its approach and retreat."

While the text of the American protesting notes was not given out, the State Department made this announcement:

"The Secretary of State, at the direction of the President, immediately brought this incident to the attention of the Spanish government through the American embassy at Madrid, and to General Francisco Franco, informally, through the American consul at Seville, with the request that both sides issue instructions in the strongest terms, as the American government feels confident they will desire to do, to prevent another incident of this character."

It is "well known," Secretary Hull said, that "the sole purpose of the presence of American naval vessels about the Spanish coast is to afford facilities for the removal of American nationals from Spain."

"MISTAKE," HULL'S VIEW

He added:

"The American government has stressed the complete impartiality of its attitude and has publicly stated that, in conformity with its well-established policy of non-interference with internal affairs in other countries, either in time of peace or in the event of civil strife, it will, of course, scrupulously refrain from any interference whatsoever in the unfortunate Spanish situation.

"Since both the government forces and the opposing forces in Spain, in the friendliest spirit, have made every possible effort to avoid injury to American nationals and American property, it can only be assumed that the attack on the United States destroyer Kane was due to its identity having been mistaken by a plane of one faction for a vessel of the other.

"Because of this friendly attitude and the absence of any motive whatsoever to attack an American vessel it is not conceivable that either a Spanish government plane or an insurgent plane would knowingly attack an American vessel."

At the same time a Paris newspaper, l'Intransigeant, published a black-bordered article on its front page announcing its special correspondent, Guy de Traversay, had been killed in Mallorca.

The priest was reported to have been the director of a school in Spain. Advices reaching here stated he was taken off a bus in the principality of Andorra while returning to France and executed by a Leftist firing squad. Press dispatches said his body was soaked with gasoline and burned.

Foreign Office officials said the reports caused a "difficult situation," but they added the Andorran government apparently was not responsible for the killing.

L'Intransigeant said De Traversay flew to Mallorca to report the operations of the Spanish government expeditionary forces.

After a considerable silence, the newspaper received a letter signed by the Marquis De Zayas, stating Traversay fell on August 17 "while in pursuit of his professional duty."

"I instituted a search for his body but unfortunately the place where he fell was the scene of fierce combat," the letter added.

VICTORIES ON 2 FRONTS LISTED BY LOYALISTS

Madrid, Augu. 31 (INS)—Spain's leftist government today broadcast claims of victories over insurgents on two major fronts.

In a desperate charge, the government announced, its forces drove back rebels at Navalperal, northeast of Madrid, in a six-hour battle that witnessed repeated insurgent attacks.

Loyalists also stated they had repulsed rebel troops in equally fierce fighting in the Guadarrama mountains, gateway to the capital. The rebels suffered heavy losses, it was stated, and left behind large quantities of war materials as they fled.

The government also asserted hundreds of Rebels on the Guadarrama front are deserting to the Loyalists.

Madrid officials, meanwhile, were forming civil guards into a "National Republican Guard."

Rebels Plan New Air Raids on Madrid

Burgos, Spain, Aug. 31 (AP)—Rebel officers laid new plans today to bomb Madrid airports as a prelude to the final drive on the capital.

The aerial attacks are to be continued, the rebel command announced. At the same time it ordered all lights in Burgos extinguished at night to prevent retaliatory raids.

Execution of Fernandez Primo De Rivera, son of the late Spanish dictator and a brother of Jose Primo De Rivera, leader of the Fascist party, was reported to the rebels by an escaped prisoner from Madrid.

The fugitive declared 2000 prisoners were sent into the prison yard after a fire started in the jail. Thirty of the most prominent were sentenced and shot, he said.

(Dispatches reaching Lisbon from Seville said 67 of 68 Rio Tinto miners were tried at a court-martial, condemned and put to death by rebels. The sole defendant to escape was a youth who was granted clemency because he was less than 18 years old, the dispatches said.)

Communism Likened to 'Leprosy'

Salem, N. H., Aug. 31—"Communism is the leprosy of the modern world," declared the Rev. John Boyd, pastor, speaking at St. Joseph's Church here.

The leprosy of the Bable that caused the destruction of bodies cannot be compared with Communism, the leprosy that feeds, not on the flesh, but on souls and minds, Father Body declared.

Characterizing the Spanish government as a "murderous regime," he warned his congregation to regard as enemies those who support it. He said:

"The Spanish government has revealed itself as an alliance of murderers. Those who by word or action support murderers are also murderers."

Father Boyd also warned against radical labor leaders, pointing out that, almost without exception, they are more than well-to-do and that their pretended solicitation for the welfare of the working man is only intrigue, through which to entrench themselves.

Leaving no doubt that his words were aimed particularly at Soviet Russia and the radical regimes of France an Spain, Il Duce thundered the defiant announcement:

"We can always on a few minutes' notice mobilize 8,000,000 men—a formidable force that 14 years of Fascism have brought to a necessarily high temper."

Lindsay Dexter's Birthday Observed at Jolly Casino Party

By BETTY ALDEN

NOT SINCE the Alteburgers and Hochgebirges got into an exceedingly jolly mood one cold Saturday as they were departing from North Station for a skiing outing in the mountains, have the more sedate members of Boston society been treated to the sight of their sons and daughters dressed up in comic hats and long flowing beards . . .

But Saturday evening, a number of North Shore youths decided that the occasion of Lindsay Dexter's birthday called for whiskers and silly hats at the party given to celebrate the event . . .

CATHERINE PENTECOST

It seems that Lindsay's birthday is almost always an excuse for some sort of antics . . . and while at last year's party the guests arrived in all sorts of absurd costumes, ranging from shorts to baby clothes, it was decided this year that as the host, and of course his guests, had grown a year older, swaddling clothes would be a bit undignified . . . So they appeared at the Casino in Magnolia for the dinner party, rigged out in long black beards and crazy hats and bonnets salvaged from some rummage sale, over their formal evening attire . . .

Once Lindsay had removed the alfalfa he was the picture of a perfect host in his formal jacket of Dubonnet velvet with satin lapels . . . In his gang which joined in the chorus of Happy Birthday was Catherine Pentecost in a sleek and sophisticated gown of white satin with a halter neck and several jewelled clips for ornaments . . .

Priscilla Dennett and Jack Goodrich were in the crowd and Harry Fessenden, up to his old tricks of cutting in on Priscilla as often as Jack would allow it . . . Louise Stevens and Boyer Miller were seated about the long table, and Mr. and Mrs. R. Lentner Sewall . . . Mrs. Sewall, who is polling a large vote for the North Shore's best dressed girl, wore an unusual frock of white chiffon with bands of fine black lace appliqued around it at regular intervals from neck to hem . . . It had little short sleeves and a simple standup collar . . .

Now that there are five girls definitely in the lead for the title of "prettiest girl" in the popularity contest at the Casino, all five hate to miss an opportunity of doing a bit of effective campaigning, and, like all good politicians, put in numerous appearances before their "public" . . .

Renee Schanck was the only one of the five we did not see dancing in the Saturday evening throng at the Casino . . . Barbara Brewer dropped in to sit and chat in her favorite corner of the cocktail room . . . and kept her eye on the balloting to see if she was maintaining her lead . . . She had on a tailored outfit of gray suiting with a frilly white blouse . . . Marion Lawrence also wore gray in a simple afternoon dress . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Watson of Milton were doing a bit of dancing, and Mr. and Mrs. Reggie Foster, Jr., were in a foursome . . . Dorothy Backus wore a sheer black net frock with coral velvet bows over the shoulders, and Mrs. Jack Gannett wore the svelte brown crepe model that makes her so tall and slim and brings out the brown in her large eyes . . .

Lucille Swift's gown of royal blue crepe was shirred and draped into a becoming style . . . Incidentally, Lucille looked very Parisian and chic at the tennis matches the other afternoon . . . with her slim little figure encased in a square shouldered cape of oxford gray wool, a black and white flowered silk dress and a little turban of white petals perched on her curly head . . .

The same day we saw Mrs. Dr. Walter S. Burrage (Kay Riley) at Longwood in a Yale blue angora sweater and natural leghorn hat . . . Mr. and Mrs. Freddie Church, Jr. . . . Aggie in an exceedingly chic bolero dress of black with a black and white printed silk sash and a five strand pearl necklace . . . Also Mr. and Mrs. Francis S. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Reed Anthony, a smart New York couple, Polly Winslow in a buttercup yellow outfit, Nancy Cassels in a pretty yellow dress with pleated cape, and Mrs. Charlie Hibbard, Jr. . . .

Today's finals will attract all the tennis fans along the North and South Shores . . .

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE YOUTH OF THE AMERICAS IN AVIATION

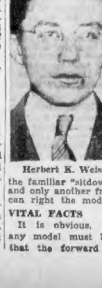
TODAY'S PILOTS OF MODELS —TOMORROW'S MODEL PILOTS!

That well known model plane expert and M. I. T. student, Herbert K. Weiss of Lawrence, dropped into Junior Birdmen headquarters and anticipating the contest to be held at Franklin Field on Saturday, September 12, typed out the following helps for model plane builders and fliers:

Longitudinal stability is undoubtedly the problem which gives the cabin builder the greatest trouble. The form in which it usually appears is the decided "sit down," when a model will stall all the way down to the ground from a fair altitude without once showing more than a feeble effort to recover a normal flight position.

This unfortunate occurrence may happen to a model airplane builder any number of times; to a model airplane designer it should happen just once.

Any model, no matter how well designed, will sooner or later stall, whether through incorrect adjustment or as generally happens, when displaced by conflicting air currents. A good model will nose down and pull out of the stall with a minimum loss of altitude. This can occur only if the wing stalls before the stabilizer. If the stabilizer stalls first the familiar "sitdown" takes place, and only another freak air current can right the model again.



Herbert K. Weiss

VITAL FACTS

It is obvious, therefore, that any model must be designed so that the forward surface stalls first. Now every airfoil has a definite angle at which the airflow about it bubbles. Beyond this angle lift drops off rapidly, and the wing is said to be stalled.

Every model builder knows that the wing must have positive incidence with respect to the tail on a tractor or negative with respect to the elevator on a standard pusher in order that the forward surface, always acting at a few degrees higher angle of attack, will reach its burble point first. But where this system works to perfection when the tail surfaces are flat, trouble often arises with the introduction of the lifting tail.

Only a brief outline of the problems involved can be given here. The subject of tandem airfoils has never been treated thoroughly in its application to models, and combinations which model builders now use are mostly the result of trial and error experiments.

SLOTS FOR WINGS

The wing airfoil is chosen from the standpoint of maximum L/D, since this determines the gliding angle, minimum drag, so that less power will be required, and maximum lift, so that the model will have a lower stalling speed.

Then by comparison with other airfoils, a stable airfoil is chosen which, besides the qualities of the wing airfoil, stalls at a higher angle, and has a steeper slope of lift against angle of attack.

It is also desirable that the maximum lift coefficient be at least as great as that of the wing. If these qualities can be obtained without the use of incidence, so much the better for the flying and gliding ability of the model. Usually a compromise must be arrived at by using the least allowable incidence, and a high aspect ratio stabilizer to increase the slope of the lift curve.

Dance Closes Hull's Social Season

TENNIS TOURNAMENT, a heap of gay informal parties and a large supper dance at Pemberton Inn marked the official close of the summer season at Hull. The week-end, which was the highwater mark in the resort's tidal wave of festivities, was attended by a goodly number of out-of-town guests.

Paulina McNamara of Brookline entertained at her guest Anne Navin. Both are leaving town shortly to register as freshmen at Trinity College in Washington. They were the guests of Marjorie Sullivan of Brookline and Hull at the dance. Marjorie wore an attractive gown of white satin . . . very effective with her golden tan.

At another gay table were Peggy Mackin . . . whose white crepe sported a cluster of red roses . . . and Mary Thomas, whose gown was sashed Kelly green. The former came with Bill Thomas and the latter was squired by Eddie Tully. Another member of their party was Ella Crowley . . . whose picturesque frock had a nosegay of gay red posies.

Hostess

Mrs. Herbert Connolly and her large party seemed bent on having the best time of the season . . . her off-white crepe was splashed with gaily-colored flowers, and Mrs. Frank Sullivan, who is always to the fore in all social and philanthropic affairs, wore red and black print . . . very smart with her platinum white coiffure.

Other members of the group were Mrs. Henry Fitzgerald and Mrs. Bernard Killion . . . costumed alike in the ever-popular black . . . Mrs. Edward McCarty . . . in a soft ruffld frock of powder blue and Mrs. David Posner's costume had distinctive touches of black.

Gretchen Coleman's ensemble was by far the most attractive . . . with her quaint frock of old rose brocade she wore a Juliet cap of seed pearls. She's the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Coleman of Hull and attended exclusive Holten Arms in Washington, D. C., last year. She's bound for a season of study abroad this year.

Lib Dooley's pale blue crepe had contrasting trimmings of fuchsia velvet and Mary Macklin, who was escorted by John Fitzgerald, wore a crisp gown of white pique sashed with red print.

Rita Maloney went glamorous in silver lame and Phyllis O'Connell, whose swain, Joe Groden, came over from Green Harbor, was smart in soft blue sheer jacket frock.

Red Satin

Glimpsed at a table skirting the dance floor were Helen and Kay Sweeney and Peggy Dwyer . . . all are New Yorkers summering at this popular playground. Helen danced quite a bit with Ernest Coulon . . . her red satin gown most becoming . . . Kay chose simple frock of green crepe for her dining and tangoing.

Jeanette Moses' black crepe sparkled with clusters of diamonds and Marion Gribby, who arrived with Bill Austin, topped her white crepe evening gown with a quilted wrap of matching satin.

A pair of good-looking brunettes . . . smartly attired in white . . . were Mary Frances Connelly and Valentine Pappas. Mary's dress was fashioned of white net . . . tiny cascades of ruffles . . . Valentine's frock was accented with bright green trimmings.

From Scituate came Marion and Ruth Carroll . . . Marion, who was accompanied by John Beatty, wore a dainty number of blue net while a red ascot added a great deal of finesse to Ruth's tailored black evening gown.

Rosemary and Margaret O'Neill were the center of another group of jolly young people. Rosemary, who is president of the Somerville Junior Women's Club, was smart in an empire gown of pale peach and Margaret wore a caped frock of delphinium blue net. Marie Barry . . . another member of their party . . . chose a soft flowered crepe gown.

Glimpsed Rose Tomasello, whose back net had a choir-boy collar of white, and Mary McGrath . . . very attractive in a gown of blue moire. It was a delightful climax of the season . . . northeaster proved a "fly in the ointment" for the house parties. No fireworks, no swimming, no weinie roasts. Hope the weather deals the merry-makers a better hand the next time.

Easy Method of Shaping Croquettes Combined with Novel Means of Frying

FROM MARTHA LEE'S MONDAY MORNING BROADCAST OVER STATION WNEX

FOODS that are French fried or deep fried have an incomparable flavor that none can deny.

And the Home Economics kitchen of the new all-vegetable shortening suggests a method of shallow frying which combines the ease of pan frying with the desired flavor of deep frying.

It can be used for meat, fish, egg or vegetable croquettes and cutlets. Use a heavy skillet or frying pan. Just melt enough shortening to give a depth of about one inch. Heat to frying temperature, 375 deg. F., which will take about five minutes.

From the same kitchen we get an easy method of shaping croquettes. Spread the mixture in a shallow pan and chill until stiff enough to handle. Shape with a biscuit cutter. Take care in coating the croquettes for one tiny hole in the coating will cause the mixture to burst through.

CORN AND EGG CUTLETS

3 tablespoons shortening
3 tablespoons flour
⅛ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 cup milk
3 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
1 cup cooked or left-over corn
1 teaspoon parsley, chopped fine
2 eggs, slightly beaten
½ cup sifted crumbs

Melt shortening in top of double boiler. Add flour, salt, pepper and paprika and blend. Add milk and cook until smooth and thick, stirring constantly. Remove from fire. Add eggs, corn and parsley. Spread mixture in shallow pan and chill until stiff. Cut into cutlets with a 2½-inch biscuit cutter. Roll in crumbs, then in eggs beaten with 2 tablespoons water, then in crumbs. Fry in hot fat (375 deg. F.) one-inch deep in heavy frying pan until brown. Drain on absorbent paper. Serve with Pimiento Sauce. Serves 4 to 6.

PIMIENTO SAUCE

2 tablespoons shortening
2 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
1 cup milk or thin cream
1 pimiento

Melt shortening in saucepan; add flour, salt and pepper and blend well. Add milk gradually, stirring constantly, and continue stirring and cooking until thickened. Add pimiento forced through a fine sieve.

SALMON CUTLETS

4 tablespoons shortening
3 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
2 cups salmon, flaked
1 teaspoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon onion juice
Dash of pepper
2 eggs, slightly beaten with 2 tablespoons water
½ cup sifted bread crumbs

Melt shortening in top of double boiler. Add flour and salt and blend. Add milk and cook until smooth and thick, stirring constantly. Remove from fire. Add salmon, lemon juice, onion juice and pepper. Blend well. Spread mixture in shallow pan and chill until stiff. Cut into cutlets with 2½-inch biscuit cutter. Roll in crumbs, then in beaten egg, then in crumbs. Fry in hot fat (375 deg. F.) one-inch deep in heavy frying pan until brown. Drain on absorbent paper. Serve with Egg Sauce. Serves six to eight.

Routine Play

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

Part of the advantage that an experienced player has is due to his ability to recognize typical situations at a glance.

Many hands which give the beginner a problem are open-and-shut to the veteran. But this habit of labeling certain combinations of cards as calling for routine treatment has its dangers.

Declarer in the hand below saw an Ace-Queen combination and took a finesse. Had he looked a second time, he would have seen that the routine plan was unsafe.

West, Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ A K 7 5 3 ♡ 8 3 ◇ A K J ♣ A Q 8
♠ Q 8 ♡ A K Q J ◇ 6 2 ♣ 10 6	North West East South	♠ 10 9 ♡ 10 7 4 ◇ Q 9 5 3 3 ♣ K 5
	♠ J 9 6 4 ♡ 9 6 ◇ 7 4 ♣ 9 6 4 3 2

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Dbl.	Pass	1 ♠
2 ♡	4 ♠	Pass	Pass
Pass

West opened the King of hearts and continued with the Jack. He then shifted to the ten of diamonds, declarer winning with dummy's King.

Declarer took two high spades, dropping all the adverse trumps. Next the Ace of diamonds was cashed and the Jack of diamonds ruffed. At this point the declarer led a low club and West played the seven. Without giving the situation careful thought, declarer finessed dummy's Queen and lost the game. East, of course, won with the King and returned a club, and South had no play to avoid losing the setting trick in clubs.

Had declarer stopped to think on the first club trick, he would have seen that the correct play from dummy was not the Queen but the eight-spot. If East should win with a minor honor, a club return would be up to dummy's Ace-Queen; any other lead would permit South to ruff and North to discard the Queen of clubs.

As a matter of fact the deep finesse of the eight-spot would have knocked out the King. West could not have broken up this play by putting up a high club, since dummy would simply cover with the Queen and retain a tenace over the other honor.

Congress Favors Camels' Hair Color

ONE OF the fall's surest smoothies of the campus will be camels' hair—not only the cloth itself, but other woolens which adopt the flattering taffy shade that's known as camels' hair. A marvelous example of how perfectly a wool dyed that shade blends with the real camels' hair cloth was displayed before the Fashion Congress when Miss Betty Stone modeled this all-around autumn star.

Tailored with an impeccable British air, the suit keeps its details beautiful in their sports-classic effect . . . bellows pockets, narrow Norfolk-type belt and high, military collar. Even the brown felt hat captures a little of the trig uniform aura. And if you love camels' hair, you will luxuriate in the light softness of the raglan-shouldered model she holds, with light-colored polished bone buttons. Shoes are graceful spectator sports pumps with built-up leather heels.

DISCUSSION TURNS TO NAME OF LESLIE

CHAPTER 86

I THREW up my head as if spurred at Katherine's question, "Why do you torture yourself with memories?"

"You are clairvoyant," I said. "How did you know I was going over that awful time?"

"Elementary Watson'," she retorted. "By the look in your eyes and the groan that evidently came from the soles of your shoes. Besides, we were talking of Mary's experience as the masked dancer. That is inevitably tied up in all our minds with that attempt of Grace Draper's to poison Dicky and throw the blame on you. But look what wonderful things came out of that near tragedy!"

I looked at her dumbly. I was too obsessed by the memory of the long months of suffering which had been mine and Dicky's after that awful time to be able to speak coherently. To me, that lack of faith on his part had been the almost unforgivable sin which had well-nigh quenched the flame of my love, reducing it, indeed, to a heap of embers which had taken long weary months to rekindle.

I would have believed him guiltless, I had told myself wildly, if he had himself held a poisoned draft to my lips. I could have forgiven anything else in him save a lack of faith in me.

POINTS OUT BENEFITS

"Have you forgotten?" Katherine asked sharply, and I knew that she was trying to exorcise the anguished thoughts which were gripping me, "in the first place, that arch-priestess of Hades, Grace Draper, finally took herself out of this world and your life.

"By that final act of a long and checkered career, she made it possible for you and Dicky to sleep at night without feeling that the original Damocletian sword was suspended over your heads.

"Secondly," she said, "look at what Mary salvaged out of the mess! A perfectly good husband who has adored her ever since he first saw her dancing in that club where he was playing.

"Thirdly," she rushed on, "and you will forgive me for putting my rude hands upon sacred things, but I think you need the reminder, I don't believe your love and Dicky's would ever have become the well-nigh beautiful comradeship that it is without that awful experience. It was tried by fire if ever a married love was."

"It came very nearly being consumed," I said, feeling better now that I could use my voice.

"I know, but it didn't," she said, and something in her voice made me realize remorsefully that this discussion of my soiled marriage problems could not help but remind her painfully of the marital maze in which she herself was groping.

With a mighty effort, I put memories of my own past suffering behind me; put my attention wholly upon the problem which this entrance of the mysterious disguised man might have upon Mary's welfare.

TRUCE TO MEMORIES

"A truce to memories!" I said. "Except those that are related to our present problem. I cannot help wondering what 'Jean le Jambon,' 'John the Ham' may mean."

"Was there anybody named John at that night club where Mary was dancing?" she asked.

I struck my hands together in exasperation at my own stupidity.

"How blind I've been!" I said, but softly, for I would not for the world have had Mary overhear the name that was on my lips. 'There was no John, but there was a Jack Leslie."

It was Katherine's turn to evince chagrin.

"Of course," she said. "He probably still holds a grudge against Mary and, while I never saw him, I fancy the name he gave himself, apparently in mockery, described him accurately."

WAS CLEVER DANCER

"No, it didn't," I answered grudgingly, for I hated to credit Jack Leslie with anything. "He was an unusually clever dancer, and if he hadn't been so utterly evil he would have been a most attractive chap. He had brains, good looks, grace and a certain charm."

"He sounds like the answer to a movie maiden's prayer," Katherine commented. "They like 'em bad. Tell me, I never have been wholly informed upon that point. Did Mary really fall for him?"

"Indeed, she didn't," I said, rushing staunchly to Mary's defense. "She was dazzled by the prestige and opportunity he gave her, but she never was the least in love with him."

"That's one point to the good," Katherine said. "Tell me something else. Does this man's description that I have given you correspond at all with that of Jack Leslie?"

"Your Figure, Madame!"

By IDA JEAN KAIN

(Copyright, 1936, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

ONCE YOU HAVE reduced to normal weight and have achieved slim proportions, you will find that specific exercises are just as important as they were in your figure program.

These exercises are designed to bring the fat-susceptible places—the muscle-lazy areas—into action and are essential to slenderness in the average figure. Everyday activities involve the use of the small muscles of the hands, fingers, feet, and even legs, but they neglect the most important muscles of the body.

You must rely on the exercises which helped you to get slim to keep your slim figure. All of you need some of these special exercises . . . and some of you need all of them.

Trunk exercises concentrate on the abdomen and waistline muscles, hardening and strengthening the tissues to maintain compactness. Unless exercise of the trunk muscles is continued the tissues will revert to flabbiness, so continue to practice your stretching exercises.

Corrective Exercise

Since the old-fashioned washboard has gone out of style, the triceps muscles located on the back of the upper arm are scarcely ever employed, and as a consequence most arms tend to become flabby and unlovely. That is the reason arm exercises are so important in figure programs. Of the numerous exercises for the triceps, you may prefer this one:

Stand with the feet slightly apart. Hold the right arm out sideways on a level with the shoulders, left arm thrown well across the chest. Vigorously reverse the arm positions, so that the left arm is flung out and the right arm is across the chest. Hold the body still, moving only the arms, and swing back and forth fifteen to twenty times.

For plump shoulders, before and after slimming, practice these movements: Raise the arms from the sides, shoulder level, turning the palms up. Bending the arms at the elbows, place the fingers lightly on the shoulders and, keeping the elbows shoulder level, rotate the arms forward in a vigorous movement.

For Fatty Tissues

Nine out of every 10 women are inclined to add weight through the shoulders, and particularly between the shoulder-blades. Here is a simple exercise for the back muscles which is discouraging to fatty tissues: Lie flat on a blanket or mat, resting the weight on the head and hips. Vigorously contract the back muscles to lift the shoulders a couple of inches off the floor. Relax, and repeat from five to 10 times.

Dementia Praecox

DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

MEDICINE HAS made great strides in the treatment of most nervous disorders, yet there remain many unsolved mysteries in this field.

For example, the cause of "dementia praecox" is still in doubt.

Although the exact cause of this strange disease is not known, a great deal has been learned about it. All this knowledge has helped a lot in setting up a form of treatment for this mental disorder. Until recent times the disease was considered to be incurable. Today, if recognized in its early stages and proper treatment is given at once, beneficial effects are certain and even complete cure is possible. This marks a tremendous advance, because in former years sufferers from the disease were committed to institutions where little hope was offered.

NERVOUS DISORDER

The symptoms of dementia praecox result from a definite disturbance in the central nervous system. This may be due to some severe emotional excitement or mental strain. It follows overwork, worry and fear. As a rule it appears in families, making its attacks upon several generations; for this reason it is believed to be a hereditary disease.

It may occur at any age, but is mostly likely to appear between the ages of 15 and 25. This is a trying period anyhow, and one in which physical disabilities are rather common. The victim of this particular disease is usually in poor health, but sometimes it may attack one who has had a history of excellent health.

Dementia praecox is really a form of insanity. It is characterized by a loss or impairment of intellect, will power and memory. If the trouble is allowed to continue for years, complete cure is impossible. Unfortunately, it must be admitted, it is often difficult to detect the disease during its early stages, because the symptoms may be vague and misleading.

COMMON SYMPTOMS

The sufferer complains of persistent headache, dizziness, insomnia and restlessness. Sooner or later he becomes melancholic, avoiding companionship and contact with others of his age. As time goes on there are periods of irritability and marked nervousness, with inability to concentrate on work. Students who are afflicted with this disorder find they are unable to read or study for any length of time. They may boast of doing great things but really are unable to do even the simplest task. The disease should not be confused with "nervousness", or some other mental disorder.

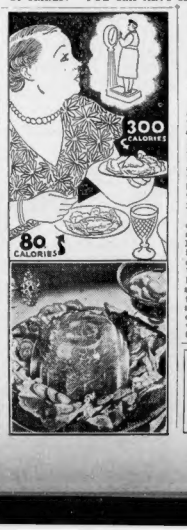
Reduce With Salads

SHED THOSE pounds this summer with the help of salads! You can have satisfying salads as a main dish of leafy ones as a salad course, both low in calories.



The calories vary greatly according to the salad dressing you use.

Mrs. Round in the sketch serves an 80-calory portion for herself with mineral oil dressing, and she dabs mayonnaise on another portion for a thin member of the family. One tablespoon of mayonnaise is 100 calories—enough for a normal person. Two generous tablespoons on the 80-calory serving of salad make the dish add up to 300 calories—just right if you're gaining weight.

The salad in the photograph is of lemon jelly, carrots, cabbage, and lettuce, and is served with Melba toast. A slice ½ inch thick is 25 calories. If she adds a glass of skimmed milk, that's 88 calories. Whole milk, 170 calories. She's living on 1200 calories per day, so she works out her menus according to preference. She knows her balanced menus which include plenty of salads will have minerals and vitamins needed to protect hair, teeth, skin, and general health.

ADVICE on LOVE and MARRIAGE -:- By Beatrice Fairfax

Girl Secretary in Love With Employer and Proud of It

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

To make decisions for the "recording angel" is quite beyond my power—and Heaven knows I wouldn't want the responsibility.

But you may reach a decision for yourselves when you have read the frank letter I have just received from a girl with a sense of humor, who exults in the fact that she loves her boss and he loves her. She has some caustic comments to make about his frigid, extravagant society wife.

At least, there is something here for wives of that type to think about. But perhaps that's too much to expect. If they were of the thinking kind, quite probably they would never have developed into that sort of wives.

As to the husband, just decide for yourself whether you blame him. With such a wife at home, how could he help falling in love with the little pal who made him forget his troubles—and laugh.

But read her letter,

Dear Miss Fairfax:—

I know my employer's wife only by her voice, when she calls up and says, "Please remind Mr. —— that we're dining out tonight, and he must be home in time to dress."

Perhaps it's my jealousy — which harks back to the cave days when women fought with tooth and claw over the man who was Boss of the cave, but that voice—his wife's voice—makes me think of the tinkle of ice; it sounds so cold.

LIKE STORE WINDOW

She represents him socially. She's in the plate-glass window where the world can see her ermine coat when they go out to the opera, and the diamonds which glitter on her breast—the barometer which informs the world he is prosperous.

But I'm the girl he loves, though I'm not beautiful or well connected, nor is my name written in the Blue Book. I'm the girl he really loves. Perhaps it's because I have a sprinkling of freckles across my nose, have red hair and a rollicking sense of humor (my Irish forbears be thanked), that I can always make the boss laugh and forget his troubles.

And he has had them, too: terribly dark days when we didn't know whether the business which had been in the family for three generations, was going to founder or not. But always I could make the boss laugh, and I could imitate the solemn moguls who used to come around and hang crepe on our door.

"Bless your enchanting ugly little mug," he'd say to me after the worst of the crepe hangers had gone, and together we'd cook up a letter that looked like a million dollars in reserve, when the bank was dunning him because he had overdrawn, and threatening him, too.

No, there isn't going to be any divorce, or any thought of marriage, even if the lady whose voice is as cold as tinkling ice were to die. I know my place, and I wouldn't swap it for any wifely exhibition in a plate-glass show window. We have a comradeship, the boss and I, that's better than anything else the fates have to offer. We've weathered plenty of stormy weather —and I can always make him laugh.

"PERPETUAL SPRING"

Let the lady with the chilly voice go out to dinner with him —long, dull dinners with other people who are dull as all these prosperous wives, who know nothing beyond playing bridge, going to the beauty parlors and spending—spending—spending! I know—I handle her account and make up her bank book. She knows how to spend, that lady!

But the boss and I go to dinner at a quiet little inn, 60 miles from the office, and we snatch a little bit of Heaven together. Nor do I believe the recording angel is going to write it up against us, because the boss pays the "refrigerator's" bills and the children have a happy home.

We—the boss and I—defy a bit of perpetual spring when we're together, because I make him laugh, And goodness knows I love him.

JOAN.

And now that you've read it—what do YOU think of it? The discussion started by Professor Smith when he defined "the perfect secretary" is bringing out a lot of clever arguments—and most interesting "case histories."

Haven't you one to contribute?

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man of 25, making a small wage at present. I have been going with a girl for nearly two years and want to marry her.

Before I met her, I was a heavy drinker. Yet I have reformed and haven't touched liquor for more than a year. I know I am through with it for life.

In spite of this, the girl tells me she doesn't trust me enough to marry me, that although she loves me, she wants a husband with a bigger salary than I shall ever earn. Her children, she says, must have every luxury, security, plus college educations and social positions.

What can I do to convince this girl I am really worthwhile?

BOB.

DEAR BOB:

Poison ivy is bad. But the girl with ten cents in her pocket and million dollar ideas in her head is a thousand times worse. I've seen the lives of hundreds of men ruined by just such women.

Marry this girl and your life will be one long repetition of bills, expenses and extravagances. She will never be able to reconcile herself to your humble wages. It must always be "do as the Jones do." And your protests won't matter a mite.

Right here in your city there are countless women who would be glad to take you as you are and be satisfied. You can't walk on the street without passing a dozen of them. They are fine, good, honest girls—excellent wife material.

Why, dear Bob, don't you tell this young woman you think you love to go hunting the rich fellow she wants. Give her your best regards, and add that you, yourself, are going to do a little hunting—for a young woman with common sense in her head?

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Lovely Hair

BY ANNA STEN

Restore Shining Glamour To Your Hair at Home

New Set of Shampoos

By DONNA GRACE

WE HAVE SAID a great deal in favor of the oil treatments for the hair, and some of the girls have written for information on just how to massage the scalp.

The purpose of applying oil to the scalp is to overcome dryness or an oily condition. The benefit derived from the oil treatments is due to a great extent to the stimulation and circulation at the scalp and roots of the hair. Good circulation is necessary for the health and beauty of the hair.

You will massage the scalp in this way—Place the hands over the head with the thumbs just in front of the ears, with pressure of the fingers rotate the scalp. Do this movement thoroughly all over the scalp, front and back of the head. Then use both hands to push up the scalp, beginning at the hairline. Do this all around the head. Follow this movement by pressing down on the scalp. Use force and press the scalp down at the top with a pulling movement towards the hairline. Ten minutes is time enough to give to a scalp massage.

OIL TREATMENT

A hot oil treatment can be done easily. Take equal parts of mineral oil and olive oil and 1 tablespoonful of each and add a teaspoonful of one of the pine bath oils.

Part the hair off in one-inch-wide rows at a time and apply the oil hot. After massaging the scalp from three to five minutes, wring a turkish towel out of hot water and wrap it around the head. Leave it on until it begins to cool and have another hot towel ready. When the second towel cools, remove it and wrap the head with a hot dry towel.

The modern shops are equipped with steamers or hot air machines for the oil treatments, so that the moist and dry heat can be regulated easily, and they stimulate the scalp with their electric massage and devices. Then a tonic is used before the hair is shampooed.

I will be glad to send you my Treatment for Tired Hair or a set of Shampoos, if you will enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for each and address Donna Grace, Boston Evening American.

Good Manners

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DROPPED SILVER

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Will you kindly let me know if it is proper for a person who drops a fork or other utensil in a restaurant to pick it up? I think that it should be left on the floor until the waiter or waitress notices it and picks it up. E.

Right you are that we should not pick it up. But it is better to tell the waiter or the waitress that we have dropped the silver-pieces and to ask her or him to pick it up

TURNING THE TABLES

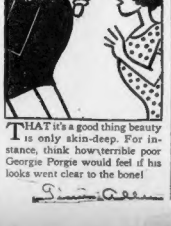
DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Is it correct to ask a young man to go to some special concert with you? L.

Yes, quite correct and hospitable.

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on Good Manners submitted by readers.)

I Always Say:—
(Sez Gracie Allen)



THAT it's a good thing beauty is only skin-deep. For instance, think how terrible poor George Porgie would feel if his looks went clear to the bone!

Fashion Flashes

Velvet plays a leading role in Manhattan's promenade of 1936 fall fashions.

It ranks with feather-light wools and dull-finished, richtoned silks as a favorite autumn fabric in the design salons along Seventh avenue and Forty-Seventh street.

Pretty models at the House of Herbert Sondheim swirl in black velvet cocktail suits with long skirts, full-skirted velvet evening gowns, and long-sleeved black velvet dinner gowns having insets of white lace at the squared shoulder.

Health Answers

Worried. Q.—I am a young girl troubled with heart murmur. What exercises would be permitted under the circumstances? Is it dangerous to take a cold bath in the morning and a hot bath at night?

A.—Your doctor will be glad to go into detail regarding your particular case. Strenuous exercise must be avoided. Take a tepid bath in preference to the hot or cold baths — extremes should be avoided under the circumstances.

WHITING, AID OF COOLIDGE, DIES AT 71

Holyoke, Aug. 31—William F. Whiting, 71, Secretary of Commerce in the Coolidge cabinet and confidant of the late former President, died today at his Elm-street estate after an illness of several months.

His last illness was brought on by several relapses he suffered following a major operation in Boston six months ago.

His illness had forced his retirement from the paper manufacturing company which bore his name and in which he had been active all his life.

Born in Holyoke, he spent all his life in this city and was recognized as a political leader and philanthropist as well as one of the country's leading paper manufacturers.

Although prominent in politics since his early youth, he never held political office or aspired to it, preferring to direct Republican strategy from behind the scenes.

He was one of the original "Coolidge" men in Massachusetts and fought to gain his nomination in the 1920 Republican convention.

MAN BEHIND GUNS

In 1928 when Herbert Hoover resigned as the Coolidge Secretary of Commerce following his nomination for the Presidency at the Republican convention, Whiting was appointed by President Coolidge to fill the vacancy.

He held the post until March, 1929, and then returned to Holyoke to devote himself to his paper business.

FOUR CHILDREN

He was the son of Congressman William and Anna Fairfield Whiting and was educated in Holyoke schools, Williston Academy and Amherst College. In 1892 he married Miss Anne Chapin.

They had four children, a daughter, Mrs. Ruth Fowler, and three sons, William, Edward C. and Fairfield Whiting.

Only Original 'Knocks' Wanted for Contest

Today is NOT the last day of this Knock-Knock contest!

Knock-knocks have been coming in so fast that office boys, reporters, rewrite men and letter carriers are swarming all over the place. The Knock-Knock Editor sits somewhere at the bottom of a pile of knock-knocks, breathing through a lowered rubber tube. At the noon whistle he spreads mustard on them and stuffs them into his mouth.

It all means that Knock-knocks are still good—until Wednesday—to be swapped in for five $2 cash awards and 10 pairs of guest tickets to that historic thriller "The Last of the Mohicans." The picture opens at Loew's State and Orpheum Theaters next Friday, Sept. 4.

Please keep in mind that we are looking for ORIGINAL knock-knocks, written on one side of the paper—typewritten or in ink preferred—and both clever and funny.

$2 WINNERS

Send them along to the Knock-Knock Editor, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop square, Boston.

Winners of today's $2 cash awards are:

William Mulvey, Hillside street, Roxbury: "Knock! knock!" "Who's there?" "Astor!" "Astor who?" "Astor story of, Astor glory of love!"

Marguerite Burrie, Cedar avenue, Somerville. "Knock knock!" "Who's there?" "Wenda!" "Wenda who?" "Wenda moon comes over the mountain!"

Ann Walsh, Morse street, Norwood: "Knock, knock!" "Who's there?" "Warner Baxter!" "Warner Baxter who?" "Warner go Baxter to my little grey home in the West!"

45 RESCUED OFF BOATS

More than two score members of Sunday boating parties had thrill stories to tell today, after rescues off Gloucester, Nahant and Boston.

Coast guardsmen reached the 45-foot motor launch Victor VI just in time to keep her from drifting on the rocks of Salt island, near Briar Neck, Cape Ann.

Aboard the helpless vessel, disabled by broken steering gear, were 31 persons, including Captain Irving Coffin of Salem and two seamen.

The 28 passengers, most of them from Worcester, were students and alumni of Northeastern University. They had set out from Salem on a fishing trip.

Cottagers from Briar Neck took 20 of the Victor VI's passengers ashore. Coast guardsmen took the others to Gloucester, towing the Victor VI to Gloucester harbor.

At Nahant Beach, Life Guard William Wills rowed 400 yards off shore and brought to safety three women and four men, occupants of the 40-foot sloop Zara, which ran aground on a sandbar in thick fog.

Those rescued were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Haid of Hull, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bolter of Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Chase of Belmont and Richard Gately of Hull.

Harbor police here saved seven Dorchester men from drifting to sea in a 25-foot power cruiser, disabled by engine trouble. The helpless craft was near Rainsford island when the police boat Curtis reached it and took it in tow.

The rescued were Norman J. Clymont, James and John MacDonald, Martin McGlont, William Caspersen, Everett Backhoff and James McNeil.

Ina Claire, Garbo Spurn Gilbert Sale

Hollywood, Aug. 31 (AP)—Hollywood's greatest souvenir hunt of the year—the John Gilbert auction—scattered the actor's mementoes to a thousand homes, but none was bought by his partner in romances of the screen, Greta Garbo.

"We sent Miss Garbo an invitation by special delivery letter to her studio and it came back marked 'refused,'" Auctioneer Ben Ball said. "We don't know whether she actually ever saw the letter or not but we were surprised by its return.

"So far as we know, Gilbert's third wife, Ina Claire, bought nothing through an agent, either.

"Of course, Virginia Bruce, Gilbert's fourth wife, and little Leatrice Joy Gilbert, daughter of his second marriage, were active purchasers."

After a week only 60 of the original 1400 items remained unsold today.

"Sentimentalists paid exorbitant sums for things Gilbert owned that I would consider worthless—old clothing, furnishings," said Ball. "Experts bid in valuable articles at bargain prices."

BRAWL LIVENS UNION PARTY

Worcester, Aug. 31 — Internal strife among members of the National Union for Social Justice was out in the open today as a result of the fist fight between the rival factions during a meeting in Main street here yesterday.

Yesterday's trouble started when C. Winthrop Small, appointed by State Director Miles W. Hayes, was presiding.

Timothy J. Stevenson, recently deposed by Hayes, appeared and demanded his right to assume the chair, displaying a letter he claimed had come from Father Coughlin reinstating him.

In a minute fists were flying in several parts of the hall, and a riot seemed imminent. Police arrived and quelled the disturbance. They remained on duty after order was restored, and the meeting was resumed.

THIS IS LIFE

By Robert E. Rogers

With 320,000 registered for the coming primaries in Boston alone, plus estimates for 30,000 more to be registered for the November election, it looks as if Eleanor Patterson's prediction of a record breaking woman's vote in the next election is worth taking seriously.

ROBERT E. ROGERS

Ever since the women doubled the voting population in the Harding election of 1920, sweeping the prophet of normalcy into office, it has been obvious that the women's vote is growing steadily by four-year accretions. Eleanor Patterson of the Washington Herald, at home in the atmosphere of national politics, has written for the September issue of Good Housekeeping an article entitled "When Women Get Together." Or rather, Bob Considine wrote it from Eleanor Patterson's scenario, as I suppose one should call it.

Mrs. Patterson estimates this women's vote at from twenty million to twenty-five million. She does not believe women will vote as a sex for one candidate.

"Women have too many axes to grind this year to take up similar standards and mark to a common goal. The agricultural situation is an example of the shifting winds that are making the political weathervane veer crazily."

Women Defeated Hoover in 1932

The women could turn the tide the way they choose, if they were to vote together, but to vote together they would have to be roused in a body beyond anything we have hitherto known. The economic situation is the sort of thing which might conceivably rouse the women to action.

"Women's votes defeated Hoover in 1932, because their men were out of work and the family pocketbooks were becoming thin. And women, if they choose, can take Franklin D. Roosevelt out of the White House. In 1936 the women probably will vote for the man best fitted to put—or keep—money in their pocketbooks.

"Women have learned that the decisions in Washington can change the very tenor of their lives, the very taste of the things they eat, the texture of the things they wear."

Mrs. Patterson's most interesting opinion is that if the women could only get mad enough, they might elect a woman President. In connection with this she tells the story of how the women of Jackson, Wyoming — 329 souls — "gathered round a pot of coffee one night and plotted to overthrow the city government."

They came to the conclusion that the men were a no-good bunch of useless loafers who mismanaged everything that had to do with the general welfare. And for the next two years the old village was governed by a woman mayor, a woman sheriff, and a female town council.

But, Mrs. Patterson adds, as soon as they had got the reforms they had campaigned for, jealousies and cliques arose and presently the old regime of the men was back in power.

Her prophecy of a woman President in days to come is conditioned, therefore, on universal indignation, the absolute unity and cohesion of women as a sex in politics. Then and only then will the great change come.

Might Have Prevented Civil War in 1860

"This is impossible in 1936 and highly improbably in 1940, but the impetus given by women in politics by Frances Perkins, Josephine Riche, Mary Nourse Rogers, and others makes it a mathematical certainty that sometime women all over the country will produce simultaneously a great 'mad,' and an outstanding national female figure will be powerful enough to get into the back rooms where the bosses write down the names of the party standard bearers and place her own name on the ballot."

The women elected Wilson in 1916, and, had they had the vote and a leader in 1860 they could have—perhaps would have—prevented the Civil War. A great "mad" can bring women power fully into politics.

"This womanly grouch will continue until chaos is reduced to order. Then . . . there will come a bickering that will split this triumphant army into isolated battalions, and women in quantity will disappear from the ruling class, until some distant date when once more their hair is simultaneously stroked the wrong way."

"GIVE ME YOUR HEART"

Girl Finds Love in Italy

CHAPTER ONE

"Dreaming of 'him,' Linda?" Belinda Warren looked up and smiled at her father. The pains about his heart, she knew, were diminishing; the lines of suffering in his aesthetic face were disappearing. This, naturally, added to her happiness.

"There is no 'him,' Oliver."

Linda could not remember when she had called her father by any other than his first name.

Oliver Warren sat on the bench beside her, beneath the trellis of grapes that shaded the entrance to his villa.

"There should be." He rested an arm across her shoulders. "Let's see, Old Girl—you are tottering on, almost into your twenties, aren't you?"

"Next week, Oliver, if a spark of vitality remains, I shall have reached my first score of years."

"Imagine it! And no 'him' as yet. Why, look here, Linda, What's wrong? Girls of your age have usually fallen madly in love a score of times—only to fall out again."

Marriage

"And, because I haven't, is there something wrong with me, do you think, Oliver?"

"Don't you like men?"

"I like gentlemen."

"That's something."

Linda turned and faced her father.

"By any chance, Oliver, are you scheming to marry me off?"

"No. That is, not exactly."

"You are worrying."

"Not exactly, Linda. What I'm getting at is that the girl who isn't sufficiently romantic to fall in love—or to think that she is in love—with a dozen or no more young men, one at a time, mind you—"

He hesitated and stared down the hill, watching the little colored sails on the Bay of Naples that seemed to him like birds of bright plumage flitting about in an upside-down sky.

"—is doomed to horrible spinsterhood," Linda finished. Her father shook his head at her.

"No. That's the trouble, my dear. Suddenly she sees a man, and, I note! She is in love."

"What is the trouble with that?"

"She is likely to be too much in love."

"How do you mean that, Oliver?"

"Like this, my dear—when a girl starts being romantic and falling in what she believes to be love with this and then that nice young lad, she is like the girl who wades out into the water day after day, a little deeper, until finally she learns to swim. But the girl who has never fallen in love and then meets some man and does fall terribly hard for him, is like the girl who plunges into deep water at the first—she's in dire trouble."

"Then you think I should practice?"

Linda laughed gaily at her father.

"Some day you will meet a man and you will fall in love, body and soul, heart and mind—nothing will matter—nothing else, I mean, you will be as helpless as the non-swimmer who leaps into deep waters."

"I believe you are serious, Oliver."

"Look here, I have been rather selfish, keeping you in this little Italian hamlet, helping me catalog my books and ancient scripts. You should have been home, among your own people, going about, meeting nice people, having the advantages due every nice English girl."

"I like it best, here with you, Oliver."

"You are a sweet child. At least you understand me and my love of books."

"Oliver, you are the perfect bibliophile!"

"Instead of risking the mails with that fourth parchment of the poems of Nonnus, I wish you would take it direct to Pritchard in London for me, then run out to Milford Downs and put in the season with your Aunt Esther."

Linda's smile disappeared.

"Oh no, Oliver, please! I ought as well wrap myself in a winding sheet, crawl into a case, and be a mummy!"

"Oh, come now, not as bad as that. Your Aunt Esther is a bit peculiar, but you always got along with her. The season is coming on, you will meet old friends and make new ones. Perhaps young Lord Farrington's wife will be well enough this season to entertain. You would meet more nice young men up at the castle."

"But I scarcely know him. I was only twelve the last time I saw him."

"Tubbs will take you along—both Lord Edward and Lord Robert are extremely fond of him. Where is that letter from Tubbs? I though he was to drop in on us yesterday."

Lovely Pals

"That is what he wrote, but as he is over having a spree on the proceeds of his latest novel, he pops about here and there without seeming rhyme or reason."

"I think I will fumble you off home with him, Linda, when he comes."

"No thank you." She made a gesture toward the sun-shot waters of the bay, "the Bay of Naples is always smiling, Aunt Esther never smiles."

"Do you know, I thought, at one time, that you and Tubbs would make a match of it."

"Oliver!" Linda laughed rather explosively. "Marry Tubbs, Barrow? How ridiculous! He is like a nice big brother, he is even paternal, we are just lovely pals—that's all we shall ever be."

Oliver Warren sighed.

"Barrows is mighty clever," he said, "I wish you would go back home with him, you really ought to meet some nice young man this season."

Linda interrupted by clutching her father's arm as a sporty yellow car hooked raucously in recent because the answer to [illegible] is not a [illegible] although the special [illegible] but a curved line. The [illegible] has revolutionized types of machinery depending on objects in motion.

"If you are Miss Warren, he said, "you have grown tall and beautiful since the time you fell off your bicycle into my pet tulip bed."

"I will never forget it, I was afraid of you, you scowled at me."

"I shall never scowl at you again, Miss Warren."

"Oh, come, Robert," Tubbs cried "it's just Linda and no formalities."

"Good enough I—"

Belinda Warren, young English girl visiting Italy, receives some sound advice on love from her scholarly father, Oliver Warren. "By any chance, are you scheming to marry me off?"

Young Lord Robert Farrington stopped sudden and stared down across the bay.

"What a view!" he cried and turned and took a camera from his car. Linda realized then, that Tubbs didn't have a car and a chauffeur, but was the guest of Lord Farrington.

"He's balmy about photography," Tubbs explained, "you will have to take him about, Linda."

They dined with Oliver Warren that evening, and put up at the [illegible] for the night. Lord Farrington's car [illegible] to start a man in relation. And every minute that she was with him she couldn't take her eyes from him. It was his wonderful smile, she thought at first.

Then she decided that it was his eyes. But after a couple of days Linda Warren decided that it was just all of the man. He not only intrigued her—he thrilled her. She made no attempt to analyze it.

Before the week was over Robert was taking two pictures of Linda to one of the scenery.

He would watch her as she sat on the broken pillar of some ruin from an ancient upheaval of Vesuvius, and suddenly he would turn the camera on her.

"The finest view of all," he would say.

They lunched at queer little inns, they waltzed among the quaint [illegible] on the shore of the bay. Robert would pose Linda against a [illegible] boat, or holding up an end of a large net—he took scores of photographs of her.

"Do you know, Linda," he said, "you have no right to be living here in Italy. Beautiful girls are scarce in England, we need you to adorn Melford Downs."

Melford Downs was the village at the foot of the hill where the Farrington castle was located. Robert was always addressed as Lord Robert, because his father was Lord Edward Farrington. It was in Melford Downs that Linda's eccentric Aunt Esther Warren lived.

Oliver Warren insisted that Robert dine with him each night. The [illegible] sine at the village inn was not [illegible]

Lord Farrington mentioned Rosamond, his wife, several times, and regretted that she was not able to entertain.

It was the next day that Linda went to her father.

"I have changed my mind, Oliver," she said, almost eagerly. "I will go back to England, as you wish."

Girl About Town

By Ann Marsters

In an obscure corner of Northampton street, there is a little red brick house with a sign in its window. It reads: "Samuel Brotherson—Psychic."

ANN MARSTERS

Mr. Brotherson is very popular in Boston's spiritualistic circles, and his clients include men and women of all ages and races. Many are staunch habitues. Some are merely curious. Others return periodically to seek counsel and advice from the "spirit world."

There is a pulpit and many chairs in the room in which his clients gather. A huge book is in the center of the pulpit surrounded by red and white candles. In one corner is a fantastic, voodoo-like head with round staring eyes that gleam in the semi-darkness.

It was 8 o'clock. The spiritualist appeared before the assembly and made his way to the pulpit. A young girl, probably out of nervousness, giggled aloud. The man regarded her gravely

"Young woman," he said, "I don't know who you are. But I know why you are here. You're here to get a message from the unknown, and if you behave yourself properly you'll get that message. If you don't behave, you'll get nothing. Here or any place else."

He turned, then, to the rest of his audience, and continued, with a distinctly Southern accent

"Now I want you-all to know somethin' about the type of work this here is, before we begin. Lots of folks think that spirits and voices appear to your eyes and ears in these meetin's, but there's nothin' could be farther from the truth. There's no spooks—not nothin' to frighten anyone. There's just the voices that I hear, that tells me the message to give to you. That's all. And I give you just what I get. Nothin' more nor less."

Tells Names, Birthplaces, Awes His Listeners

After that speech, he went on to pick out individuals in the group; to tell them their names, their place of birth and a few other unexplainable truths. But when pressed for information, he would abruptly turn to another subject. Nevertheless, the truths that he had offered were sufficient to impress and awe his listeners.

There may be no doubt that many spiritualistic readers are sincere in their belief that they are contacting spiritual sources.

They describe their gift as the attuning of the mind to an "intangible electric universe" which they claim to be all about us, unsensed and unseen by materialistic eyes.

Home-Town Boy Makes Good in Hollywood

They say that far-away fields always appear greener than those close by—and I know of a case in which that platitude is very true.

There's a clever young writer in Hollywood named Dan Mainwaring who is working as a press agent at one of the studios. He wasn't given a writer's job—because he's a native Californian, and Hollywood isn't impressed by home-town writers. To be considered a "big shot" you have to approach Hollywood from the East.)

Anyway, Mainwaring has now been revealed as "Geoffrey Homes," the writer of two successful mystery novels, "The Man Who Murdered Himself," and "The Doctor Died at Dusk." Hollywood, very enthusiastic, is dickering for the screen rights.

When a Feller Needs A Friend: Walberg Steals the Spotlight

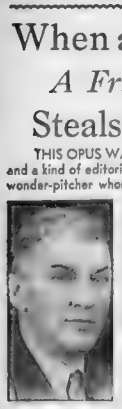
THIS OPUS WAS INTENDED TO BE a eulogy of youth and a kind of editorial whoop for Bob Feller, the 17-year-old wonder-pitcher whom the Cleveland Indians sicked on our upsidedown Red Sox in the last game of Sunday's doubleheader. Instead it turns out to be nine rahs and a tiger for Rube Walberg, the barnacled old hero who nearly jelled his name into the no-hit records.



Austen Lake

Walberg's age is listed as 37 in the little book and he is shown to have pitched commercially for Portland, Ore., in 1922. But George Wright, Boston's octogenarian sportsman and captain of the 1876 Cincinnati Red Stockings recalls that he had a left-handed pitcher named Walburg on his club who was the spittin' image of Rube. Only, Mr. Wright says, he wasn't called Rube. He was called "General" because he had claimed to have fought at Appomattox with Ulysses S. Grant.

It may be just coincidence, but during a recent Pullman jump a dining-car waiter said, "Here yo' is, General," as he placed Rube's order of chicken gumbo on the table. And Rube turned a gaze of puzzled shock on the black menial, as though striving to brush away the cobwebs of old memory and reconstruct a half-forgotten past.

QUITE A FELLER FOR A KID

TWENTY-ONE THOUSAND PATRONS came out to witness what was expected to be another strikeout miracle for the adolescent genius of the Cleveland club—a very fair payload considering the disintegration of the Red Sox. Feller had struck out 15 of the Browns in his inaugural appearance at St. Louis last week, and was said to be a blended reincarnation of Walter Johnson, Grover Alexander and Lefty Grove as they were at the peak of their careers.

The crowd didn't come to see Rube, who was said to be on the verge of a one-way train ride to the minor league wilderness and this was supposed to be the farewell gesture of a stricken man who is soon to go yonder. Rube was just one of the general mob scene as Feller started his demonstration by striking out three of the first six Red Sox to face him.

All eyes were focused on the calflike kid who squirmed in his uniform like he had a hornet in his shirt which he was wishful of twitching out. He was a gangling youth of average high school size, all angles and elbows. But he began blowing down the Red Sox like a seasoned alumnus, causing the boys to jerk back their front feet and fan for his pitches as though fearful of having their brains dashed out, as nearly happened several times.

CROWD SLOW TO SEE RUBE

WALBERG JUST BREEZED ALONG comfortably, dishing up a little of this and a smidge of that, with never enough of any one thing to let his pitching menu look fat. And presently, in the Red Sox half of the third, Mel Almada and Billy Werber lifted doubles in graceful arcs that hit just beneath of the fishnets on top of the left field wall, which are there to prevent home run balls from busting the neighbor's windows on the other side of Lansdowne street. And when Jimmy Foxx rolled a grounder into center field, the Sox had three runs.

Steve Sundra, the ex-Yankee, was instructed on the steps of his cave to stop the parade of Sox. He with his chin cupped in his hands. And when the fourth inning ended he turned toward his left field bull pen and made suggestive motions with his arms, so that the squad of emergency pitchers came off the bench where they were simmering in the sun and went hurriedly to work.

It was plain that Steve didn't intend to discourage his wonder-boy by letting the Red Sox slap him around. It had begun to look like a contest of whether Feller would decapitate some of the Sox with wild pitches before he was beheaded himself by line drives through the box. So Steve thumbed him out of there and sent him in for an early bath, and the boy ambled across the diamond looking embarrassed under the shower of hand-claps that followed him.

MOVES BILLY EVANS TO WONDER

WITH FELLER GONE THE CROWD suddenly awoke to the fact that Walberg was heaving airtight ball and as yet had not been touched for a base hit. And by the time the sixth inning rolled around they began to give big glory shouts for every routine putout behind Walberg's pitching, so that each little pop fly that rose in the hazy air was hailed with a mighty roar that made it wise to clap your hands to your ears to spare wear and tear on your drums.

By the time Rube ended the seventh with nary fluke or scratch against his record, the fans were saying that here was history being made before their eyes and the first no-hitter in several years was about to be born. There were chill drafts of approaching autumn sweeping the stands. The infield grass was tipped with the first faint yellows of fading summer. The Red Sox had been through a season of grovelling funk and were bogged down in sixth place. Yet here the citizens were yelling their hearts out over each trivial putout as though the club was chin-deep in the pennant hunt. It moved Billy Evans, the Red Sox scout master, who was viewing the excitement from the press coop, to wag his head wonderingly and enquire what kind of ear-splitting noises the Boston crowd would emit in a World Series.

But the dream was dispelled in the eighth when Joe "Calamity" Vosmik drove the first pitch into left field's coffin corner for a double and the crowd expelled its breath with the amplified sound of a tire leak. And in the ninth Hughes and Hale hit additional singles that made it a three-hitter and ended the game, 5 to 1, for our side. The Sox had triumphed in a doubleheader. Triumph is no word at all. Triumph has the sound of a knock compared with the jubilation which took place in the Red Sox quarters, with old barnacled Rube the center of a congratulatory circle like he had just been elected to Congress or had shot radio common back to boom market prices.

U. S. Doubles Champions—Unless the Experts Are Wrong Again

Don Budge, left, and Gene Mako expected to become U. S. doubles champions for the first time at Brookline in the final against the defending title-holders, Johnny Van Ryn and Wilmer Allison. Budge and Mako, second seeded, have beaten Van Ryn and Allison nine times this season and the experts are agreed they'll do it again.

Predicts Defeat Of Miss Jacobs

By ELLSWORTH VINES

New York, Aug. 31—The national tennis championships, which start at Forest Hills on Thursday provide the final opportunity of the year for American and foreign stars to show what they can do in the tennis field.

The American championships are the last important international tournaments of the year and this year's tournaments though not as strongly favored with international stars as in the past, provide many interesting aspects.

There is the probability that Helen Hull Jacobs, the defending women's champion, will meet with defeat at the hands of Alice Marble another Californian, if the pair should gain the final round. The foreign lady players, with the exception of the left-handed Kay Stammers, of England, and Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, of France, have all passed up the tournament, and it looks like the battle is definitely between Miss Jacobs and Miss Marble.

I believe that if these two girls meet in the championship round we will all be hailing a new champion. Miss Marble has the kind of a game that can win from Miss Jacobs. With the championship at stake, I believe Miss Marble will put it over.

Perry in Peril

Fred Perry, England's ace and Wimbledo champion, is the outstanding of the foreign invaders. Perry met with unexpected and dramatic defeat on these same courts last year and this year the road to regaining his lost laurels is strewn with even more difficulty than it was in 1935.

Unfortunately, Wilmer Allison, the defending champion and conqueror of Perry last year, is one of the big shot Americans not competing this year. The other ranking Americans who have decided for one reason or another to pass up the tournament are Frank Shields, Wilmer Hines and Hines' partner Bunty Lawrence. Outside of these players, the same stars that have been seen in all of the season's eastern tournaments are entered.

To a number of players, especially the new stars from California, the national championship is a new venture. The Bobby Riggs, Joe Hunt, Wayne Sabin, Charles Gilbert and the other freshmen have done in the previous tournaments will be completely overshadowed by what they do in the national tennis championships. To them the championships are the final test.

Perry and Miss Jacobs are regarded by the majority of experts as overwhelming favorites to win the men's and women's titles, respectively. Perry won the singles crowns in 1933 and 1934 before meeting with injury and defeat last year. Miss Jacobs has won the women's title four years in a row. They are, incidentally, the only past or present champions competing in the tournament.

Youth Threatens

For myself, I believe that both of the champions are going to have more than their share of difficulties. In Perry's case, his toughest competition, strangely enough, is going to come from our younger players, many of them not yet 20 years old.

Donald Budge who reached the semifinals at Wimbledon this summer, and still a youngster in years, can hardly be regarded so when it comes to international tennis experience. Budge is not winning this championship, and he is not going to be the victim of an upset, such as Bitsy Grant pulled on him last year.

The Oakland, Cal., redhead also has added confidence and if he plays Perry he might be able to defeat England's acrobatic ace in an important match for the first time.

A lot, however, depends on the luck of the draw. If Perry should happen to draw such ambitious youngsters as Frankie Parker, Grant or Riggs in his half, he may find that these boys with their retrieving type of game may wear him down so that he won't reach the finals in the best of form.

Budge, too, might find this type of opposition a bit tough on the stamina.

By DAVE EGAN

Well, my fine lads and lassies, we're going out there to Longwood again today to give them the old collitch try and see if we can't get this tennis title business settled once and for all.

We were rained out Saturday but, after a vigorous training bit at the Narragansett down Newport way, the old sockeroo is in fine fettle and set for a real workout.

It looks like were going to get it in the opening match for the national women's doubles title because in this corner we have Helen Jacobs and the little girl with the great big racquet, Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan. Away over ther are Mrs. John Van Ryn and Carolin Babcock.

Feature Match

When they've straightened out the wreckage after this bout the promoters are putting on the feature battle royal between John Van Ryn and Wilmer Allison, the defending champions, and Don Budge and Gene Mako, the challengers for the heavyweight tandem tennis title.

If you've got anything left, mah frans, you'll look at a right smart contest in the national mixed doubles final with the Mutt and Jeff combination of little Mrs. Fabyan and big Don Budge against Alice Marble and Gene Mako.

Hold your breath folks—I am coming up with a few Egan selections.

In my book they figure this way: Jacobs and Fabyan; Budge and Mako; Fabyan and Budge.

You might also recall that I liked the big red horse to give Granville a mod bath.

But anyway tomorrow is another day and you can trust the old Egan to have a swell explanation.

And it may be that the mixed doubles fight is going to require a lot of explaining after the show the Marble girl and Mako put on for a Sunday turnout of nearly 6000.

They put on an exhibition match with Helen Jacobs and John Van Ryn after Allison defeated the semifinal with Miss Jacobs against them. Wilmer spent the week-end up in Maine making things safe for the G. O. P. and needed to tune up for that men's doubles conference.

Large Gallery

Alice and her tennis pal, Mako, scored a 7—5, 6—2, 6—4 win before a gallery that spread all over the grandstand, the lawn and the treetops.

It was a crowd to give Herr Paul Bowser a very large, headache for the gate received is absolute zero what with the Longwood folks allowing everybody and his brother to watch the show for no.

The other half of the twin bill found little Miss Mulloy and Don Budge, getting into the mixed doubles final by knocking out a 6—2, 6—4 win over Mrs. John Van Ryn and John McDiarmid who spends his spare time tossing science at those brainy Princetons.

The big red-head from California—Mr. Budge to the Longwood regulars—took charge of the situation from the start. He slashed and whacked and lofted himself in knots but he was a bit better than 500 in getting it over the net.

Mrs. Van Ryn and McDiarmid really didn't have much to do because Mrs. Fabyan and Budge were either making [illegible] or forcing quick errors [illegible] themselves obso[illegible]

WILDNESS, POOR CATCHING HAMPER FELLER

Mr. Boston

Danno Seen as Solon

By JACK CONWAY

SPEAKING of news: Ed Don George, former world's heavyweight wrestling champion, has been wrestling in Honolulu. He recently won from "Jumping" Joe Savoldi in straight falls.

George will return to the United States in the early fall. Don is only 30 years old, which is young for a wrestler. He has hopes of winning back the heavyweight title.

Mr. Boston

Don first won the title from Gus Sonnenberg only to lose it to Strangler Lewis. Henri DeGlane unseated the Strangler, and George came back to lick DeGlane. Don held the title until beaten by the youthful Danno O'Mahony.

• • •

Dan Levin, Long Island butcher boy, is recognized as heavyweight wrestling champion in California as a result of his recent win over Vincent Lopez. In New England, Yvon Robert, French Canadian, is tops among the wrestlers since he conquered O'Mahony in their tussle in Montreal.

• • •

Dan Casey

DAN CASEY of the Caseys of Kerry, European heavyweight wrestling champion, will sail for the United States next month. He will land in Boston, and plans to offer $1000 to anybody he cannot throw inside of an hour. Casey has won 200 straight matches in Ireland and England during the past two years. Casey is anxious to meet O'Mahony in a bout in Dublin before sailing for America, but Danno is averse to accepting the match.

• • •

Casey will receive $100,000 from Paul Bowser for an American tour, which is the most money guaranteed a foreign athlete since Tex Rickard paid Georges Carpentier $200,000 to battle Jack Dempsey. The latter received a guarantee of $300,000. The show drew $1,600,000 which gave Rickard a handsome profit after he paid for the building of Boyle's Thirty Acres and other promotional expenses.

• • •

Bowser is a bit upset over the story from Ireland that the Free State government is considering an athletic post in the cabinet for O'Mahony. Paul was planning to match O'Mahony and Robert for a return bout at the Garden.

• • •

Ireland like many of the European nations, has become athletic minded. It is felt that O'Mahony as Ireland's greatest athlete would stimulate interest in sports if he held a cabinet position.

• • •

If Max Schmeling wins the world's heavyweight boxing championship from Jimmy Braddock next June he will automatically step in Hitler's cabinet as chief of athletics. Such a move will mean his retirement from the ring. In such an event Mike Jacobs of the Twentieth Century Club would stage a heavyweight tournament to name the new champion, confident that Joe Louis would end up with the title.

• • •

The element of age should help Louis to become world's champion. Schmeling and Braddock, top flight heavyweights, are 30 years of age, and cannot expect to continue in the ring wars much longer. Louis should keep getting better as a boxer for two or three years.

ROOKIE Has Great SPEED

SOX, INDIANS LOAF TODAY

By JOE CASHMAN

He's not another Walter Johnson yet, folks, and likely he never will be, but that Bob Feller boy can pitch for our side any time.

The Indians' 17-year-old wonder rookie throws just about the fastest ball to be seen in the American League these days. And his curve is something to tell the boys in the back room about.

His handicaps are wildness and lack of a first-class battery mate.

In his first local appearance, he was chased to the showers in the fifth inning with the score 4 to 0 against him principally because he frequently was shy of control and more often was handled poorly.

During his stay on the hill, he fanned five of the Sox. He threw a fast ball for a third strike past Jack Kroner twice and used the same pitch to whiff Rick Ferrell. His other victims were Jimmy Foxx and Joe Cronin and he handcuffed those two worthies with as sweet a hook as you could hope to gaze upon.

But he was also guilty of handing out three passes, uncorking a costly wild pitch and nearly decapitating several of the expensive Fenway charges.

With a smart, experienced catcher, he'd probably have been far more impressive. It was noticeable from the very start that he was having trouble hitting the target with his fast ball and was controlling his curve beautifully. Yet every time he was in a hole, Charlie George, his kid receiver, called for the "hard" one.

Catcher Blamed

A Cochrane, Ferrell, Hartnett or Lopez could make a world beater of the kid. Even as green, erratic and crude as he is, he has the stuff to be invincible if handled properly.

Full advantage must be taken of his "hook." He's fast enough to throw that apple by plenty of batters, but he hasn't that Johnson speed that could blind 'em all. The real good fast ball hitters can bolt his bullet ball. Billy Werber, noted for his ability to hit speed, whacked out two doubles off him Foxx, after fanning on a curve, hit two fast pitches for singles.

A crowd of 21,000 was on hand to watch Feller and accorded him a splendid ovation, but it was the Sox who earned and got the loudest applause all afternoon.

The chastened Wes Ferrell, again tending strictly to the business of pitching, bested Oral Hildebrand for his 17th victory of the season in the opener.

But it remained for the ancient Rube Walberg, whom most of the customers had forgotten was with the Fenway flock, to supply the major mound thrill of the afternoon.

Stepping to the hill with a record of one win and three defeats and not a single complete game pitched this year, the veteran southpaw buried Hildebrand and faced only 22 Indians in the first seven innings.

Walberg's masterful spell by slamming a clean single to left-field to open the eighth, but Rubinoff settled down for a three-hit performance and a 5 to 1 triumph.

The game originally carded for today having been shifted to make possible the twin-bill on the Sabbath, the Sox and Indians will loaf this p. m. and conclude their engagement on the morrow.

Here's One Feller Who Failed to Find a Friend at Fenway

THAT OLD ADAGE about youth being served was scrambled a bit at Fenway Park on Sunday when the venerable Rube Walberg outpitched Bob Feller, 17-year-old pitching sensation of the Cleveland Indians. "Young" Feller was forced to leave the game after the fifth inning when the Red Sox managed to solve his offerings. He is shown above in street dress after his retirement while the other picture shows him demonstrating how he gets that fast one away.

N. E. Golfers Only Fair | Good Word For Belmont

By BILL GRIMES

Since the inception of sectional qualifying rounds for national amateur championships, the fields have become so infested with "hackers" that steps must be taken to weed out the deadwood.

Shortly before the qualifications at The Country Club, there was a rumor in circulation to the effect that the United States Golf Association had allotted New England only eight places. As a result some of the outstanding golfers began to develop the jitters and the hackers started to yelp, muttering.

Bill Grimes

When Francis Ouimet, Jesse Guilford and Freddie Wright reached their peaks and started to skid, New England, in general, and Massachusetts in particular ceased to be a threat for national honors. There are some good golfers in New England, but they are not blessed with sufficient ability to rise above the surface in national competition.

Of the 90 golfers who played in the 36-hole qualifying round at the Country Club last week, I question if there were eight capable of getting through two rounds of match play in a National amateur championship.

With the exception of Joe Lynch who was a semi-finalist last year at Cleveland one has to delve far back into the records to uncover a Massachusetts golfer better than Ouimet or Guilford who were seriously threatened to win honors in the amateur event.

I doubt if 60 per cent of the field at the Country Club entertained even the remotest expectation of qualifying. Tournament play has become a test of achievement to play in a qualifying round of a United States amateur championship. And, strangely enough, it does. Figure that most boys play golf in June and July, the best golf handicappers are in the field.

It is a safe bet that there were between four and under par scores. And, a large percentage of those who played at Brookline are not even four men in their home clubs. They become eligible by convincing their club handicappers that it will be good publicity for the club to be represented. And the club handicappers are so nebous enough to go for such bosh.

There were any number of contestants at Brookline last week, who could not break 80 at The Country Club, if they played there all season. A goodly portion of the field entered because they believed it was the right thing to do from a social viewpoint and also that it was their one chance to play The Country Club course at the rate of $1.67 per round.

During the Walker Cup matches this week at Pine Valley, the United States Golfing Association will go into a huddle and hopes to come out with a solution.

And while on the subject, the U. S. G. A. have rule against players qualifying outside their home districts. Texas was allotted six places but when the amateurs gather at Cleveland City next week there'll be except Lone Star State representatives for five qualified out of their home state.

Belmont Springs Country Club Still Doing Business at Old Stand

Early this season there were many rumors adrift concerning the Belmont Country Club. It was stated that Belmont had failed up and when that rumor proved to be groundless the word back was that it was going out of business.

Now, the truth of the matter is that the Belmont Country Club has and still is enjoying a most prosperous season. Many members, who resigned when the rumors were adrift, have returned to the fold and today the Belmont Country Club is on a sounder basis than it has been for many years.

Belmont will get the play next season, for the dues will be $100 for men and $75 for women. It is not as expensive as the country clubs in the city, especially if the course is in the fine condition as it has been this year. I've been playing golf almost every day since the first of April and am free to say that I have never seen greens in such remarkable condition as they have been this season.

Twin Loss Drops Bees To Sixth

Pittsburgh, Aug. 31. The headdenting Bees spent today in the comfort of their hotel rooms building their spirits which took a sad thumping in the Sunday twin bill with the Pirates.

Also Manager Bill McKechnie had been banished in the first inning for protesting an umpire's decision too vigorously, the Pirates made a twin killing by 4-2 and 3-1 scores.

The protest which marked Mr. McKechnie's final appearance of the day proved to be the turning point of the game.

The count was three and two on Bill Brubaker with the bases loaded in the first of the pale-wash p. h. but Umpire Barr ruled that a ball thereby forcing a run.

The decision sent Bill Lee back into sixth place in the race of cap in the nicety after Cincinnati. Tomorrow they make their season's final appearance at Pittsburgh.

GIANT VICTORIES Over Cubs Nearly CLINCH PENNANT

A five-cent world's series is more than a possibility today. It's even advanced beyond the probability stage. In short, it looks like a certainty.

New York's rampaging Giants underwent the acid test and came through like real champions. With the Cardinals coming on strong, and the Cubs hot on their heels, the Giants have a four-game lead over the Cubs, whose Windy City "crucial series" is no longer crucial.

In the American League, the New York Yankees took another long step towards mathematically clinching the pennant they've had salted away for some time.

Carl Hubbell reduced the batting average of the Cubs' Phil Cavarretta to .299 when he blanked Phil and his mates for the second time in a week, 3 to 0, in the opener of a double-header at the Polo Grounds. The Giants won the second game, 5 to 4, in 10 innings.

Meanwhile, the Cardinals increased their lead to 16 full games

'DROP BARTENDER'—ROBERTSON

PROTEST Bar on SHIP

TEAM NEEDS TOP SERGEANT

By DAVIS J. WALSH

New York, Aug. 31 (INS) — There having been a great deal of arrant nonsense aired by Olympic athletes and officials in connection with anything they feel called upon to suspect about each other, it struck me today it might be eminently fitting to have Head Track Coach Robertson tell what he actually knew about both. This, I think, he did—subconsciously and by inference.

He said that we must drop the bartender from the next Olympic ship and substitute a first rate top sergeant.

"If I have anything to do with the next Olympic team, I'll protest against a bar on the ship," he announced today. "Of course, I may have nothing whatever to do with the next Olympic team, and, of course, we'll have the same kind of team, the same officials, the same allegations of scandal. The only thing different will be the scenery.

There will be no change in the official setup, he pointed out, even though its present popularity may be limited to members of its immediate family. Mr. Brundage, it seems, is a volunteer official, who prides his bookkeeping on the general abuse for the sheer pleasures of the thing. Practically all the rest are volunteers, too, meaning, I suppose, that before you can logically fire a man, you've first got to pay him.

Besides, as one is able to infer from Robertson's allusion to the entertainment features of the trip, the officials were really very generous. They not only had a bar for libations; they even provided one for the athletes.

The result, below decks was of an overcrowded house party. Three and sometimes four athletes were assigned to a room, so that if one or more were dressing the others were forced into the passage. If they were without gumption, or into the tourist bar, they then depended to be very strong with some strength of character.

Among their number were young ladies of the sub-deb age and young men who were just off the campus and knew their way about. If they wanted to be discreet, they might have been served in their rooms. But probably after the first day or two they saw no point in that.

The officials with [illegible] power and significance were [illegible] decks, perhaps having a suite [illegible] on their own. Below, [illegible] was so crowded as to [illegible] solute privacy. They really wouldn't have missed a dead body until the stewards came around to sweep up.

All-Star Football To Draw 80,000

Chicago, Aug. 31 (AP)—The boys who've played for glory—and those who do their stuff for cold cash—play for keeps before 80,000 gridiron fans at Soldier Field tomorrow night.

The Collegiate All-Stars, one hundred of the finest college and university football stars of 1935, oppose the Detroit Lions, world's professional champions, and both squads are expected to cut loose in an effort to throw some light on that old football puzzler—"Can a good college team whip a good professional outfit?"

The former collegians rested today, having wound up an 18-day training campaign yesterday with a snappy drill and review of tactics expected to stop the National Professional League titleholders.

The wasn't any question about which 11 players would start the tilt the fans of the nation who selected the squad in a nation-wide poll participated in by 183 newspapers have taken that job out of the hands of Head Coach Ernie Biernan and his four assistants.

At the flank positions will be Wayne Millner of Notre Dame and Keith Topping of Stanford. Dick Smith of Minnesota and Truman Spain of Southern Methodist will be the tackles while Paul Tangora of Northwestern and Vernon Oech of Minnesota will be the guards. Homer Jones of Ohio State will handle the center duties.

In the backfield will be Riley Smith of Alabama, elected captain of the squad, at quarterback; Bill Shakespeare of Notre Dame and Jay Berwanger of Chicago, at the halves, and Sheldon Beise of Minnesota at fullback.

Biernan declared today, however, that the starters will have to play heads-up ball to remain on the field any length of time. The Minnesota coach said he will demand that his players block, hoping that good blocking will overcome the advantage of ten pounds per man the Lions will hold.

The professional champions will work out at the field tonight. Coach Potsy Clark has indicated these players will start: Ends—Ed Klewicki and John Schneller; tackles—George Christensen and Jack Johnson; guards—"Ox" Emerson and Sam Knox; center—Clare Randolph; quarterback—Glenn Presnell; halfbacks—Ernie Caddel and Frank Christensen and fullback, Ace Gutowsky, Earl (Dutch) Clark, drop kicker extraordinary and all-around star, is expected to see early service.

RABBIT In .300 CLASS

MARANVILLE SETS PACE

New York, Aug. 31 (AP) — Connie Mack's sandlotters are doing so well at the gate, the Philadelphia patriarch is going to abandon his practice of selling his stars this winter.

Max Schmeling turned down an offer of $300,000 for a return bout with Joe Louis.

Sad he wasn't interested in the dough . . . Yet he is coming back here in November for an exhibition tour . . . You answer that one . . . Extra special for Notre Dame fans: Jack Ledder, sports editor of the South Bend Tribune, is the popper of a husky son . . . Another halfback prospect, wot?

Old Rabbit Maranville is going like sixty for Elmira in the New York-Penn League . . . He's hitting over .300 and fielding like a flying chicken . . . One of the tests of a real ball club

The Yankees are scoring frequently after two men are out . . . Referring to the recent claim of Pancho Villa that he was forced to go into the tank for Aldo Spoldi, Jimmy Wooda, Brooklyn sports writer, asks if it's "Villa-nous work?"

Fred Make 'Em Good

Fred Frankhouse, the Brooklyn pitching ace, says he always tries to make his first pitch to a batter the best.

Prosperity item: The Yankees have played to more than a million at home, so far . . . Why doesn't some big league club go after Johnny Lewis of the Louisville Sluggers? Lewis, a lefty swinger, who has hurled three no-hit games this season? . . . The Yankees will not bid for Wes Ferrell because of too much temperament.

Tony Marino, who fights Sixto Escobar tonight, is the zing's new Cinderella man . . . It'll be only his seventh fight in the East, yet he finds himself battling for a world's title . . . Jack Dempsey wasn't a bit disappointed because the latest arrival was a gal . . . But he was so excited he fired up a lounge of his restaurant

Glenn Hardin, the Louisiana hurling ace, and Gene Venzke, the distance runner from Penn, were just a couple of the returning Olympians who got a few things off their chests . . . They squawked because the badge-wearers rode first class while the athletes were No. 3

Hardin said the trip cost each performer about $200 . . . "Not long is this "knock, knock" stuff going to last" . . . Attendance has slumped at Fenway Park along with the Red Sox . . . They say there are more Irishmen than Argonauts on the baseball pool team . . . Helen Stephens took on 20 pounds during the Olympic trip and now tips the old beam at 175.

BUDGE, Helen Jacobs, SEEDED ON TOP

New York, Aug. 31 (AP)—Don Budge, Oakand, Cal., red head, and Helen Hull Jacobs, Berkeley, Cal., defending titleholder, today were placed at the top of the seeded lists for the national singles tennis championships starting Thursday at Forest Hills, L. I.

Fred Perry, three-time Wimbledon champion and 1933-34 American champion, was seeded first among the foreign contenders for the title at the Longwood Cricket club, but the Texas, veteran, who will not defend the crown due to a back ailment.

Gay Sidney, attractive British left-handed star, was placed at the top of the women's foreign list. The only other seeded female invader is Mrs. Tokuko Moriwake Nakano, Japanese champion.

Baron Gottfried Grant of Atlanta was seeded second on the domestic list, followed by Sidney Wood, Jr., Los Angeles, Frank Parker of Lawrenceville, N. J.; Bobby Riggs of Los Angeles, Gregory Mangin of Forest Hills, Raymond of Fort Worth, Tex., and Hal Surface of Kansas City.

Mrs. Sarah Fabyan of Brookline, Mass., runner-up to Miss Jacobs last year, was seeded second, followed by Alice Marble and Caroline Babcock, Pacific coast stars; Mrs. John Van Ryn of Philadelphia; Gracyn Wheeler of Santa Monica, Calif., Helen Pedersen of Stamford, Conn., and Mrs. Mary Greef Harris, Kansas City.

Bernard Destremeau, 19-year-old French Davis cupster, was placed behind Perry in the foreign division. Jaques Brugnon, Yvon Petra and Pierre Pelizza, rounding out the four-man tricolor invasion, followed Destremeau in that order.

COLLYER'S SPORT OF KINGS COMMENT

By BERT E. COLLYER

Copyright, 1936, by Bert E. Collyer Race News Service

Chicago, Aug. 31—Aqueduct! The Metropolitan racing scene is shifted from fashionable Saratoga to the Queens Layout for the sport of today and the opening provides nothing, in particular, over which to enthuse

The feature is the Woodmere claiming stakes a seven furlong junket for which Master Hirsch, who has not been going so fast of late, seems to have the winning hand.

Overnight, he named both JESTING and ACTION and, with the former going, it would seem that all will be well.

In the night-cap, I have something of a sleeper in PETER PIPER, which slipped in from Detroit. Again, it's the Jacobs entry which must be beaten Tewkbum.

Over at Gansett, where there is every reason to believe the mud again will prevail, I am making Mr. BLAZE by one best. As a matter of fact he is entitled to a clean-cut edge in class over those he will be meeting in that third fracas. The lad at the track, who by the way has been doing some fancy picking of late, tips me ROCK POINT will take the measure of the favored CRETE in the sixth. Also, you may get more than 7 to 5 posted in my picks BUSTER BOY, in the fourth, and TUGBOAT, in the eighth, are the others that I like extra well here.

If they let BOTTLE CAP go in that fourth at Washington Park, it will be little more than a cakewalk. If not, I'll have to take ROBERT L. with NAVARRE close up. ARTHUR B. and LOCKSTEP are just like that in the first while SLRVEYOR looks real good to these old eyes in the sixth. Assuming that the trace has become frail again over the weekend, I look for NORMAN L. to get in the seventh route. Otherwise, it will be HIT AND RUN.

ANIMATE, which is sandwiched away in the initial canto, is the day's outstanding wager at Detroit. Also, and for your further information, I fancy the chances of MISS LEANNAH, in the third, LIVE ONE in the sixth, and MISS PETRINA in the seventh Wheel it away, blondy.

Dave Has Three At 'Gansett

Dave Wilson, one of America's leading handicappers who is out front of all local selectors for the entire summer New England meeting had another good day at Narragansett Saturday when he had three winners and had three more of his top choices finish second.

The Boston American's ace started the day in great shape by having Earl Porter on top in the first and the Fairbanks horse came through in handy fashion to pay the very nice price of $19.20 to win, $16.50 to place and $14.00 to show.

Mr. Blaze, Dave's best bet took the third with very little difficulty and Rumbosh, Dave's choice in the $5000 handicap race won going away and paid $7.70.

In both the fourth and seventh race, Dave's first two choices finished in reverse order. In the fourth Irin Torch, his top horse ran second to Lt. Greenock his second selection. The same occurred in the seventh when Fair Countess beat Count Tetrach by half a length.

Dancing Boy, Dave's top choice in the eighth took second honors.

Wild Bill Cummings May Race at Readville

AUTO RACES WILL AID CHARITY

THIS ACTION PHOTO was taken at Readville during the last race meet held there and we see Rex Mays winning his trial heat. Bob Sall is second and Vern Orenduff is third. READVILLE TRACK

Almost Ready for

AUTO SPEEDSTERS

Races on Labor Day

If present plans are carried through the automobile races at the Readville motor speedway on Labor Day under the auspices of the Boston-Readville Racing Association, with the Boston Evening American Christmas Basket Fund sharing in the profits, will mark the Eastern debut of Wild Bill Cummings.

Cummings, Indianapolis winner of a few seasons back, is being looked upon as one of the main reliances to repel the foreign invaders at the Roosevelt speedway in October.

Cummings has not done any race driving in the East this year, but recently signified his intention of picking up once more with a new car. Douglas Yule, of the local association, has been in communication with Cummings and the people he represents with a view to securing his signed entry blank for the Labor Day races.

With that end in view Yule, together with Frank Alden, went to Paterson, N. J., yesterday to discuss the matter with a person qualified to represent Cummings.

Seeking Others

In addition Alden and Yule will try to secure the entries of some of the leaders among the midget drivers who race their small cars weekly in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. While these men spin round the fifth of a mile ovals in midget racers, each of them has a heavier car such as is used for the speedway events.

Today the task of completing the resurfacing of the track will be finished and after a day or so of hardening it will be ready for practise spins by any of the racers who may have arrived in town. Officials of the Boston-Readville Association as well as representatives of the A. A. A., under whose sanction the meet is being held, will inspect the track before any car is permitted on the surface.

The engineers have announced that with the asphalt emulsion thoroughly set, the danger from accidents through the presence of unusual quantities of dust will be almost negligible. In fact everything humanly possibly has been done to prevent a repetition of the fatal accident which marred the races July 18.

Should Cummings finally decide to enter the local races it seems highly probable that miles well down toward 38 seconds will result. The reconditioned surface together with one or two vastly improved cars, particularly that which Mays will be driving will make for much greater speed than was apparant on July 18.

EAGLES FACING

New Football Future

WITH GIL DOBIE

1st Practice Wednesday

By WALTER KILEY

Out of the moth balls and the cedar chests come the moleskins and the pigskins.

For the next three months our suburban college campuses will echo and re-echo with the sharp staccato barkings of the signal callers while soaring punts and winging passes flood the ether.

Boston College leads the way into the fall pastime.

Introducing a new coaching system, with the well-known Gil Dobie of Cornell fame as the man upon whom the Eagles pin their hopes for winning football the University Heights clan will trot out 70 strong on Wednesday afternoon.

Others Follow

Dartmouth follows suit on Friday. Brown and Middlebury report on Monday next, Holy Cross one week from tomorrow, Boston University on September 8, Amherst on September 9. Harvard, Yale and Princeton abiding by the "Presidents'" agreement and turning out on September 15.

Wednesday marks an important point in Boston College history.

It is the turning point with the Eagles definitely shutting their backs on small time stature and seeking the richer and lusher fields of big-time gridirons.

The Eagles spent money to bring Dobie to Boston, figuring that his many long years and their accompanying football experience would be more than repaid by victory over bigger and nationally known opponents.

It's almost 10 years now since Boston College has been coached by other than a graduate.

There was the late Major Cavanaugh, a Dartmouth grad. In 1927 "Cav" went to Fordham and was succeeded at the Heights by the greatly respected Joe McKenney.

Joe Retires

Then Joe stepped into the late beloved Fred O'Brien's office in the Boston department of physical education. And Dinny McNamara moved in. Then came Harry Downes for a brief spell. And now comes Dobie.

A mighty task confronts Dobie and his associated coaches.

The Eagles are confronted with a top-heavy schedule which after a quick getaway with Al McCoy's Northeastern University Huskies swings immediately into a powerful Temple team, one which appears certain to be one of the strongest in the East.

There are other formidable elevens also Boston-headed, Hunk Anderson's North Carolina State, Michigan State, still smarting from a totally unexpected defeat of a year ago, Western Maryland which splattered the Eagles all over the landscape a year ago, Holy Cross, New Hampshire State and others.

Dobie gained some slight idea of his material during a torrid spring session of laborious work and scrimmaging.

But his real efforts have yet to begin. Starting Wednesday afternoon, his candidates will work out from 2 o'clock to 6 each afternoon until college classes reopen late in September.

FLOYD GIBBONS' PAGE OF THRILLS AND MYSTERY

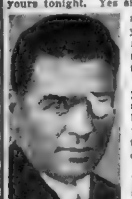
A Swim for Life

Sailor Swims Through Fierce Barrage of 15-Inch Shells

By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO EVERYBODY:

Boy! Oh Boy! Come in Leroy. The seat of honor is yours tonight. Yes sir, that story you told me puts you at the head of the class. In fact, you know Leroy, I like your story so much that I'm going to keep you after class and slip you a check for ten bucks.



FLOYD GIBBONS

You know, boys and girls, if you'd follow Leroy's example and shoot your adventure teacher a nice big rosy story, well I'll do the same for you. You bet I will. You'll have to stay after school while I write that check out.

When LEROY BURDICK of WAKEFIELD, R. I., was 20 years of age he was a "gob" in Uncle Sam's Navy. Leroy was attached to a target repair party off the San Diego coast during the winter maneuvers of the fleet.

It was the duty of the repair party to set and maintain the targets. These targets were triangular shaped rafts about 80 feet long and covered with sails or screens supported by masts.

After a division was through firing, the repair party would proceed to the targets, change the sails and the next division would swing into line and open fire. There were three of these targets set two miles apart.

Leroy tells me that it was a good life. The repair party, 16 men in all, lived on a tug which hovered around but out of range of the firing line. The boys sat around playing cards, reading, laughing and fighting in between target changes.

The first week of the maneuvers went off smoothly. First the destroyers had their practice and then the battlewagons pulled on the line. After firing their first round they started night maneuvers.

The night of February 6 was the big night in Leroy's young life. Just as one division was through, the bell on the tug rang and all hands came on deck. The boatswain mate got his orders to proceed to target number three, work in all possible haste and return in a hurry, as division number two was already on the range waiting to commence firing.

When the boat returned to the tug it was to signal that all was in readiness and that the division could fire at will.

Number three raft had had it's mast blown off which necessitated replacing it. It was quite a job and the boys were working hard.

Leroy had gone aft on the raft and was tightening a guy wire.

He had been working five or six minutes when he suddenly had a strange feeling of being alone on that raft.

Division number one had begun firing on target number one, two miles away. The noise was terrific and Leroy couldn't hear a thing.

Dropping his tools Leroy ran for the boat.

IT WAS GONE.

He could see its running lights far off in the distance.

WELL SIR, LEROY WAS SURE IN A SPOT. STRANDED IN MID-OCEAN ON A RAFT WITH THE UNITED STATES NAVY STANDING BY TO BLOW THAT RAFT TO KINGDOM COME AND LEROY WITH IT.

That ocean was black and cold and rough and Leroy was not too good a swimmer. It was no pleasant invitation to have to jump in and swim through a barrage of 15-inch shells in the middle of the Pacific Ocean at night.

While Leroy was deciding what to do the signalman on the tug sent his flashes into the air—O. K. target number three.

Leroy jumped into the water and started to paddle. He hadn't gone a hundred yards when—wham—bang—those battlewagons had started.

SHELLS WERE LANDING ALL AROUND HIM THROWING HUGE WAVES INTO HIS FACE. THE SALT WATER CHOKED HIM. THE RAFT HE HAD JUST LEFT WAS HIT. HE SWAM FASTER.

Leroy wondered when one of those big shells was going to hit him.

Would he be able to swim out of range?

He was choking on the spray the shells made, he was sobbing, praying.

His mind whirled.

He saw his home, h.- the back yard where he used to play marbles.

He wished he hadn't skipped Sunday school so often and spent his pennies at the drug store. He swam on "My jig was up. I knew it. Oh God! I babbled in a half sob, half choked bawl. Each shell that hit near me sent that gagging salt water down my throat," George says.

But then the firing ceased. He looked up and saw a search light scanning the water. IT SPOTTED HIM AND STOPPED.

Leroy doesn't recall much of the rest. He remembers being hauled into a boat and that's all. Back on the ship when he came to, his partner told him that after returning to the repair tug the boys had started a poker game. His partner looked for him and, of course, not finding him had set up an alarm. The guns were ordered quiet, and well, we know the rest.

That was some story, sailor. But I'll bet that you Grandma, have a yarn down in the bottom of your knitting bag.

HOW ABOUT UNRAVELLING IT AND SHOOTING IT ALONG TO ME?

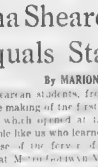
Hundreds of people in Boston and nearby towns have received ten-dollar and hundred-dollar bills for their yarns, and there's no reason why you can't do the same, for, as Floyd says, everybody has had at least one adventure. Norma Shearer's Portrayal Equals Stage's Best

By MARION FRENCH

Shakespearean students, from eminent authorities who had a hand in the making of the first sound screen version of "Romeo and Juliet," which opened at the Colonial Theater last night, down to people like us who learned to love the Bard's most tragic lovers because of the fervor of their hearts, seemed unanimous most not fear what Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on the case has done with this film



Norma Shearer [illegible] picture Juliet [illegible] be desired in [illegible] effect [illegible] concerned She creates the illusion of the 14-year-old daughter of the Capulets in a [illegible] fashion and looks her part at all times. Howard is [illegible] when he should be [illegible] dreamy eyed when he should sparkle and allows Juliet to shoulder too much of the balcony love scene ship, in our opinion. However, he is at his best during the sad der moments of the picture especially in the apothecary shop scene and the sequence showing him in Juliet's tomb being the best new suffering in love. And his speech is so brilliant that it makes up for any physical deficiency one may find.

Edna May Oliver does a [illegible] ness characterization of Juliet's ghoul and faithful nurse. This fine character actress completes targets her mannerisms [illegible] and becomes the [illegible] and so much to do with furthering the romance between the maid of Verona and Romeo.

Joseph P. Kennedy Defends (And Criticizes) President Roosevelt

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

II

Returning again to the crucial question of New Deal "planning," Mr. Kennedy devotes a whole chapter to what he calls a "defense" and "definition" of "planning."

He contends that "planning" will in the future make us "depression-prepared."

"If we continue in this direction," says the author of "I'm for Roosevelt" (Reynal & Hitchcock, $1), "we shall be ready, economically, financially and socially, to act rapidly with blueprints drawn in advance. There is no other time to do this but now, when prosperity is returning. If the New Deal goes along on these lines of planning for a generation or two, it may end depressions altogether."

It should be noted here in passing that as a generation is about 33 years, Mr. Kennedy is generous enough to bestow on President Roosevelt and his New Deal a future tenure of from 33 to 66 years.

DANGER FROM RADICALS.

Mr. Kennedy is not blind, however, to the dangers from some of the extreme radicals who surround Mr. Roosevelt. On this question he has this observation:

"On an opposite front, the New Deal is assailed by melancholy radicals who want so many things, and want them overnight. Some of their aims are good, but any belief that they can be quickly accomplished has small place in the program of a realistic political party. But a part of this group merely wants to do away with the Democratic order altogether. No debate with these is possible since their purpose is not to discuss but destroy."

In regard to what Mr. Kennedy calls the "anti-spenders," he says:

"In many instances the spending activities of the Administration are the subject of proper attack . . . There is still a strong case to be made out for the opposition, in particular instances, on the score of wisdom, partisanship, efficiency."

But Mr. Kennedy does not believe that the defeat of Mr. Roosevelt at the polls will end the problem of Federal expenditures and bring about a balanced budget. If Mr. Roosevelt is defeated, he "would expect little change in the Federal fiscal problems, but great trouble if the policies of President Roosevelt were to be abandoned."

FAVORS A BALANCE

The former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission breaks a lance with the "constitutionalists," the people "who honestly believe that the President seeks to overthrow Constitutional government by covert means."

These pros and cons over the Constitution and the Supreme Court are dismissed somewhat lightly by Mr. Kennedy, who says:

"The differences about the Constitution and its interpretation (by the Supreme Court) should not give us great concern. It is the natural result of the newness of the New Deal. If the American people want the policies advocated by the President to prevail, they will prevail, and in an orderly, peaceful and Constitutional manner. And this despite the reign of terror conjured up by the 'constitutionalists."

He accuses the "Constitutionalists" of being guided by motives that are "more mundane and selfish than the ideals of patriotism and human welfare in the name of which they protest."

Mr. Roosevelt himself in his "planning" is compared to "an unselfish scientist who sacrifices time and energy to seek health for the masses."

On the question of federal securities legislation, Mr. Kennedy is, of course, thoroughly at home.

He reviews all the steps that led up to the enactment of federal legislation and the creation of the securities and exchange commission, of which he was the first chairman, his tenure having extended from July 3, 1934, to September 23, 1935.

He contends that the securities act "is far less burdensome in many particulars than the statute providing for postal fraud orders. The act represents a minimum protection for the public whose money is sought for private enterprise."

He takes up one charge after another that has been levelled at the securities act, the difficulties of its administration and denies that the commission "embarked on any campaign to instill fear into the securities business. Who can doubt that if similar statutes had been in effect in 1920 billions of dollars would have been saved to American investors, the excessive speculation of the Twenties would have been impossible, the credit inflation lessened and the staggering burden of debt in large part avoided?"

PUBLIC FREEDOM

Mr. Kennedy considers President Roosevelt "the real defender of American freedom."

"The Roosevelt administration," says the author, "has restored the confidence of our people in democracy by a conscious intervention into the economic forces of our national life. The New Deal is founded upon a basic belief in the efficiency of the capitalistic system. Every effort has been strained to preserve the system. It believes neither in State or private Socialism."

Certain of the critics of the President have "no sincere interest in a better 'state,' no honest desire to clean up 'the unholy mess' beyond salvaging the interests which they control."

This Administration, according to Mr. Kennedy, is to a certain degree for "regulated individualism." This is necessary, he contends, if we are to avoid "real dictatorship."

The repudiation by President Roosevelt of ante-election pledges is "examined in the light of unforseeable events." He defends "latitude of action" in the Executive as "essential to efficient performance of his duty."

Summing up his interesting defenses and criticisms of the New Deal Mr. Kennedy concludes that "in Roosevelt lies the hope of real freedom for the mass of the people of the United States."

The little book has a helpful index.

FOR ROOSEVELT

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY

—VOTE AMERICAN—

Curb Stock Prices Steady

New York, Aug. 31 AP)—A steady tone prevailed in the curb market today, although some irregularity was perceptible in the oil and utility sections.

Company reports for fiscal years ending at the close of June had some effect on price movements, Sunshine Mining gaining fractionally on a favorable showing and Columbia Pictures breaking more than 2¼ points on a drop in net from the preceding fiscal year. Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, another substantial loser, sold off about 2.

Gains of a point or so were scored by Consolidated Gas of Baltimore and Alabama Great Southern.

Wall Street Hears

New York, Aug. 31 (INS)—That Standard Brands (SB) will place its stock on a $1 annual basis before the end of the year, against the 80 cent dividend now paid.

That dividend payments on Allied Stores (ALS) common stock are likely soon.

That Telnutograph Corp. (TZ) will show about 16 cents a share for the third quarter.

DRIVE On 'Hidden' TAXES

PLANNED BY BUSINESS

By GENE ROBB

Washington, Aug. 31—Business and industry have decided that now is the time for an intensive campaign against "hidden" taxes.

The soaring cost of government and rising tide of unseen levies will be dramatized by trade groups in newspaper advertising, by store posters and on roadside billboards.

Total annual tax burden is being estimated at [illegible] to 10,000 million dollars — approximately four-fifths of the nation's entire food bill. Well over one-third of the revenue comes from federal levies.

Hidden federal taxes, which have more than doubled since 1929, are criticized as a double-barreled device to conceal the levies which must be borne by the public in general and to put the blame of higher prices on business firms which are forced to act as tax collectors.

RUSSIAN CO-OPERATIVES

President Roosevelt's special committee appointed to study the consumer co-operative movement in Europe will learn that co-operative stores are being dismantled in Russia. The Department of Commerce reports that they [illegible] being replaced by government supply depots, managed directly by the commissariat for domestic trade.

Suubstituted for private enterprises after the Russian revolution, co-operatives did 68 per cent of all retail business in 1929, but had lost nearly half of this to government stores by 1934.

Opponents of consumer co-operatives fear the Russian experience might be duplicated here if troops are given government aid. Contending that group management never is as efficient or economical as private enterprise, they foresee bankrupt co-operatives being taken over by the federal government.

SOCIAL SECURITY STALEMATE

The Social Security Board has abruptly changed its mind about registering 26,000,000 wage earners this fall under its old-age pension system. Registration will not get under way until after the election. Procedure has not been announced. Finger-printing all workers is being seriously considered.

Board members say they wish to move cautiously in this huge undertaking. Business men see a political motive in the delay. They believe immediate registration would remind workers of the 2 per cent tax on their wages that must be paid next year.

A total of 16,000 government employes will be needed to establish the pension program. Five thousand will be used to collect the taxes, 7500 to register the workers and 6800 to perform other administrative duties. Only [illegible] have been hired so far.

Meanwhile the board is circulating pamphlets about pension payments that do not begin until 1943. Payroll taxes, which rise from 2 per cent next year to 6 per cent in 1949, are not mentioned.

FISCAL Policy Held PERIL

TO JOB SECURITY

Unemployment could be reduced and present jobs safeguarded at prevailing or higher wages if the "state of public finance were such as to inspire more confidence on the part of those who supply capital and those who employ labor," according to the current issue of the Guaranty Trust Company "Survey."

In a discussion of the average man's stake in balancing the government's deficit, the Survey states the only escape for persons of moderate incomes from the "evils of crushing taxation" must come "through an abrupt change in fiscal policies and aroused public opinion."

BLAMES INDIFFERENCE

Blaming a lack of understanding for the complacency with which many citizens have for years viewed the government deficits and mounting public debts, the Survey adds:

"People whose incomes are moderate or low, and who therefore pay little or nothing in direct taxes, are not generally aware of the part that they generally play in bearing the tax burden."

The Survey calculates that a typical family of four with an annual income of $2500 pays about $200 a year in traceable indirect taxes and considerably more if hidden taxes are taken into account. It further states:

"But this payment falls far short of representing the family's share of the cost of government—that is to say, the amount the family would have to pay each year if public expenditures were being met out of current tax revenue.

"As a result of the wide discrepancy between government revenue and expenditure, this typical family, considered as a participant in the enterprise of government, has been, and still is, running consistently further into debt, and each year a larger amount of its tax payments goes to pay interest on the indebtedness."

FEARS ALTERNATIVES

The article refers to an estimate that the servicing of the gross debt of federal, state and local governments now requires more than 20 per cent of the revenue recipts of government from all sources. Therefore, it calculates, probably about $40 of the $200 paid in traceable taxes each year by the typical family with a $2500 income goes for debt payment alone, and this amount is increasing annually, it adds.

The Survey states repudiation and inflation are the only two possible alternatives open to the government if it finds "itself unable to meet its financial requirements by taxation and borrowing."

In either event, it warns, the great majority of people of small means would be among the worst sufferers.

Principal Sources Shown

Total gross operating revenues of the Associated Gas and Electric Corporation for the year ending May 31, 1936, amounted to $109,634,405, an increase of 5 per cent over the previous year.

The chart shows the principal sources of operating revenues. Electricity provided nearly 80 per cent of all the operating revenues, gas 11.9 per cent and all other 8.2 per cent.

The Associated Gas & Electric Corporation, with its approximately 42 subsidiaries, is at present fighting the Wheeler-Rayburn bill that was passed last year designed to control utility holding companies.

The corporation refused to register under the Public Utility Act, instead it started proceedings to declare the act unconstitutional as appplied to their particular corporation and is seeking an injunction to prevent its enforcement.

Silver Peso Return To Mexico

Mexico City, Aug. 31 (INS)—Mexico will return to the silver peso tomorrow, according to an official announcement today.

The one-peso paper notes which have been in circulation since May, 1935, will be retired. Copper 20 centavos pieces also will be replaced by silver.

Wall Street Sidelights

New York, Aug. 31—People who are more or less kindly disposed toward the Securities and Exchange Commission pointed to its decision to grant the request of 12 companies for confidential treatment of certain information, principally details about sales and certain contracts, as evidence that this organization is not so completely bureaucratic or unreasonable as various others have painted it.

Much of the hue and cry about its regulations has originated in the fact that the information now required to be made public never had been published generally before the commission was created. Matter of salaries paid to executives at one time was a sore point, for instance. Applying the universal practice of an employer being fully informed about the salaries paid to his employes, the stockholders, as legal and actual owners of the companies, similarly claim they are entitled to know what compensation their officers receive. Included among the companies affected by the Commission's rule were: Bendix Aviation, Borg-Warner, B. F. Goodrich and Timken Detroit Axle.

North American Usual Dividend

Disappointment was felt in some quarters because North American directors authorized only the regular dividend recently had no effect whatever on the market for the stock. The talk for several weeks and even while the board was holding its deliberations suggested an increase in the rate or possibly an extra might be forthcoming. This expectation grew out of the improved earnings of the system and consequent larger aggregate of current profits subject to the federal tax on undistributed income. For the 12 months ended June 30 net for the common stock was $13,061,587, equivalent to $1.52 a share against $1.13 a share the preceding 12 months. The dividend amounts to $1 yearly of $8,575,335, so that the balance remaining, or $4,486,252, represents the surplus that could be taxed under the new revenue act. The last published statement of the company stated no allowance had been made for the Federal surtax based upon undistributed income "as it was impracticable to estimate it at this time."

Texas May Ease Oil Restrictions

News that the Texas Railroad Commission would consider early next month modifications of the rules restricting oil production in East Texas gave rise to fresh anxiety yesterday over the general petroleum outlook. The possibility that the curb in that locality may be eased comes at a time when production for the country is approaching its peak, although current consumption is absorbing the increase and cutting into surplus stocks of both crude oil and gasoline. Wall Street is also keeping close watch on gasoline price developments because of the practice being followed by leading distributors with respect to retail outlets. Price cutting on the part of independents is still in progress in many leading cities.

Best Rock Island Year Since 1931

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad freight loadings currently are running better than 26 per cent above a year ago, and cumulative loadings for 1936 to date are almost 14 per cent above the like 1935 period. This heavier traffic has been reflected in the road's gross revenues, which are the largest since 1931. The biggest revenues in five years enabled the road, which is operating under trustees in bankruptcy, to show operating net of $759,000 for July against $143,634 in July of last year. At the end of June the road's cumulative net loss for the first half was greater than a year ago. The higher July showing, however, lowered the net loss for the first seven 1936 months under that for the like 1935 period, the figures being $9,290,000, against $9,852,000.

Coal Movement Aids P. & W. Va.

Heavier freight movement over Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway's lines, mainly heavier soft coal traffic, lifted the road's July gross to $342,000, against $210,000 in July, 1935, and as a result the carrier's July operating net of $113,000 is over three times greater than the $34,000 of the like month of last year. The high rate of activity in the steel industry at Pittsburgh has been the stimulus behind the Pittsburgh & West Virginia's gains. The road in the first of 1936 half earned 68 cents a common share, against 5 cents in the first half of 1935.

TRADE Enters Third QUARTER

AT 1931 LEVELS

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER

Copyright, 1936, Universal Service

New York, Aug. 31—Theorists have visualized many reasons why business should react, but it went through the summer thus far in a counter seasonal manner without a slump.

Despite election hazards, drouth and warlike developments overseas, economic recovery has continued in the United States.

General business enters the final third of the year at approximately the best plateau attained since May, 1931. The vitality of the upward impulse recalls the remark by James Speyer, the financier, that prosperity is the normal condition for the United States.

Despite the improvement, business, of course, is still subnormal. Once the existing disparities and maladjustments are fully eliminated, the way will be paved for full re-employment at high effective wages, and then progress in perpetually elevating popular living standards can be resumed.

New Deal politicians have recently looked wistfully at the European consumer co-operatives.

When our American corporations develop customer ownership they present nearly all the advantages of consumer co-operatives.

In this spirit, chief executives of well-managed corporations send welcoming letters to new stockholders, and seek to interest them in the company products.

The president of a leading cerea[l] company sends full-sized packag[es] of its principal products to n[ew] stockholders, saying in an acco[m]panying letter to female stockho[ld]ers:

"We hope you and your fam[ily] will enjoy using these produ[cts] perhaps with some of the ex[cel]lent recipes given in the [illegible] booklets enclosed or on the packages themselves.

"With your recent purchase of our stock, you became part owner of a company whose products have an enviable reputation for quality. They enjoy wider distribution and use than those of any other wheat processing corporation.

"Your help in recommending the use of these wheat foods in your home and those of your friends will definitely contribute to your company's continued success."

RECOVERY

Boston BANK STUDIES Outlook

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

The unusual activity of business may be attributed to natural recovery forces following several years of severe depression, but this does not mean that the upturn rests upon a solid foundation.

The New England letter of the First National Bank of Boston, in making the above observations, points out the dangers of federal largess and suggests a method by which they may be minimized if not eliminated.

The vitality and vigor of the present upswing, due to the fact we are now in the general recovery phase of the business cycle and huge accumulative demand is being met on a broadening scale, present an ideal opportunity for the federal government to aid the return of confidence, in the opinion of the bank's letter. Artificial support in the form of subsidies and relief could now be gradually withdrawn, thus restoring faith in the future and expediting the release of many projects now held in abeyance. The flow of funds would be cut down so scientifically that recovery would not be jarred and federal credit would no longer be in jeopardy.

Rails are by far the most interesting section of the bond market. By turning in a good performance of late they have done much to cheer stock traders. Almost daily they have been making headway in new high ground. This seems particularly important since it follows a previous sidewise move that took place when rail equities were declining. Otherwise the lien market, as depicted by our charts of the Associated Press averages has done very little. Industrials, utilities and foreigns have been moving sidewise for nearly two months. In the case of the first two action duplicating that of the rails would be a promising sign. As for the foreigns continued sidewise action would suggest European problems are not of immediate concern, and an upturn will hint at a lifting of war clouds.

* * *

Notebook: Now that the railroad equipments have come to life we suggest following a rather aggressive policy of accumulation during the reactions . . . Next on the list as far as we are concerned come the automobile equipment stocks . . . In answer to questions regarding our position on American Sugar now that it has had such a smart move we can only say that we still favor the stock for long term holding . . . Full year earnings estimates for Curtis Wright are making their appearance . . . We like the one calling for $1.50 per share on the "A."

* * *

Some stock averages, including one kept by this writer, have only negotiated rallies of normal technical proportions. In other words 50 per cent of the preceding decline. However, since this percentage of recovery is measured against a reaction which in itself appears only to have been the corrective movement balancing a previous and more important upswing, we will not overemphasize it as a minor technical affair, but instead consider it, for the present at least, as the first phase of a resumed uptrend.

* * *

Ticker Ticks: Some readers may find it convenient to use the hourly releases of the Dow-Jones averages in seeking confirmation of a renewed uptrend . . . We will do this and consider the parade toward higher levels is on again when both the industrials and rails touch 170½ and 56½ respectively . . . The air conditioning industry is blooming . . . Word from Washington is that government officials expect it to provide vast stimulation for older industries and push itself into the thousand million dollar class within a few years . . . Once again we call attention to Carrier Corp. on the curb . . . It is the only simon-pure investment in the industry.

STEEL SHARES IN DEMAND

New York, Aug. 31—The stock market stepped carefully but firmly in today's proceedings.

Favorable earnings and dividends continued as the principal stimulators for both speculative and investment participation. Profit-taking was encountered at intervals. This was absorbed in most cases without particular disturbance.

While the pace was comparatively slo wnear the fourth hour, gains of fractions to a point or more predominated.

Steels and specialties were the favorites. The motors improved moderately. The utilities and rails did not move very far in either direction.

Among those in the advance range were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Interlake Iron, Ludlum Steel, Crucible Steel, Deere,, J. I. Case, National Distillers, U. S. Industrial Alcohol,, American Telephone,, Auburn General Motors, Chrysler, North American, du Pont,, Anaconda, General Cable, Fairbanks Morse, Baldwin Locomotive preferred, American Car & Foundry and American Locomotive.

Standard Oil of New Jersey, Socony-Vacuum, Union Pacific, Pennsylvania, Consolidated Edison, Western Union and Sears Roebuck eased. Many were unchanged.

Bonds inclined to work higher, with carriers taking the lead. Grains improved. Foreign currencies were quiet.

Brokers reported some buying from the West recently in mail order stocks. Despite the drouth it was believed the exceptionally large increase in the total agricultural cash income may be reflected in the mechandising field.

Survey Studied

Traders studied the weekly survey of the magazine Steel, which painted a hopeful picture of the progress being made in this industry.

The review pointed out that the awarding of contracts for 10 destroyers and five submarines will result in the purchase of a large amount of steel. In addition, prospects for extensive railroad buying this fall were said to be excellent.

Holders of oil shares were interested in the figures for last week's production, which indicated a decline in crude of more than 42,000 barrels. Heavy consumption of gasoline was reported from all parts of the country.

The French franc, at 6.58½ cents, was .00 3-16 of a cent higher at the start of foreign exchange transactions. Sterling was up 1-16 of a cent at $5.03⅛.

Washington Notebook

Washington, Aug. 31 (AP) — Broad advance in tourist travel this summer is reported by the commerce department . . . For the week ended August 26, the department found business at New England resort hotels 12 to 20 per cent ahead of last year. A "tremendous increase" in summer travel was listed for Florida, tourist business jacked up gasoline tax revenues in Texas sufficiently to pay for the state's participation in the centennial celebrations and tourist traffic in Oregon was at a "record rate." Buffalo and Minneapolis also reported upturns and vacation travel generally upped leather goods and luggage sales in New York . . .

Dollar volume of new automobile retail financing in July is fixed by the Commerce Department at 8.4 per cent under June, 56 per cent above July, 1935, and 72 per cent above the same month in 1934. For the first seven months of this year, the figure was 61 per cent above the similar 1935 period.

As measured by the National Fertilizer Association, the wholesale commodity price average has reached the highest point since November, 1930. For the week ended August 5, the association's index—based on 1926-28—stood at 80.3 compared with 79.9 for the preceding week and 78.1 for the same week a year ago. The figure has shown an increase in 11 of 13 weeks since May 16 after sagging downward early in the year.

The Far West marked up the greatest advance in rural retail sales during July, the Commerce Department reports, with an increase over the same month a year ago of 25 per cent. A 24 per cent upturn is shown for the South, 19 per cent for the East and 12.5 per cent for the Middle West. All sections showed seasonal declines under June.

Comments of Brokers

A periodical survey of the opinions of brokerage house analyists found none expecting worse than a trading range over the near term, and majority looking for at least moderate gains. G. M.—P. Murphy & Co.

We look for the rails, motor, motor accessory and steels to be favored. J. E. Molloy—Hornblower & Weeks.

For the present, traders should retain their positions in such selective issues as previously recommended as the immediate course of prices still appears upward. R. S. Feigus—Prentice, Blauner & Brady.

We continue to favor representative shares in the railroad and electrical equipment, Eastern rail, merchandising and heavy steel groups, believing that such industries have the brightest outlook over the months immediately ahead. E. G. Blackburn—Paine, Webber & Co.

The bullish effect on the market of such trade betterment is enhanced by the compulsion of larger dividend distributions so that advised policy for the pull should be adhered to. J. P. Maher—Shields & Co.

PROFITS TAX LAW

Upsets Old STOCK VALUES Yardstick

By LESLIE GOULD

International News Service Writer

The current trend of more generous dividends brings up the question of the proper yardstick for the stock market.

In the last three months, 468 corporations have taken more favorable action. That is, they have paid either extras, increased the rate, resumed payments, voted initial disbursements, or paid on account of accumulations.

And before the year is out the number promises to be double that, and probably better.

* * *

This is the result of:

1—The improvement in business that has come in the last year and a half, with repudiation by the courts of President Roosevelt's alphabetical "recovery" measures, and

2—The vicious new tax law on corporation surpluses forced through Congress by the White House whip.

* * *

The first is a normal natural development. The old yardsticks cover that. But it is the latter—provided it stays on the books—that necessitates a change in or a new ruler for judging market values.

If that law stays on the books in its present form—and it is hard to see how it can, when even some of the President's most ardent supporters call it a serious mistake—a stock cannot be judged on its ratio to earnings and dividend yield.

In the first place the dividend yield will not be as stable as in the past, for under the new law corporations that plow earnings back into surplus accounts and for plant improvement will have to pay a penalty tax. This will mean that a greater proportion of earnings will go out in dividends.

Out of this will probably come a new dividend policy of no fixed rate or adoption of the English system of a regular dividend in the middle of the year or in the first three-quarters, with a final dividend in the last quarter based on the earnings.

Several corporations have already adopted one or the other, and General Motors is understood to be considering some such action.

* * *

With corporations prevented, except by payment of a penalty tax, from plowing earnings back into plant and into surplus accounts for tiding them through the depression years, prospective investors will have to give more attention to such things as:

Cash reserves of the corporation.

The type of industry it is part of, whether it is one of greater ups and downs, like steel, or fairly staple, like the foods.

The general conditions, up-to-dateness and efficiency of the company's plants and properties.

The company's general position in relation to the rest of the industry.

The management, and

The effect of national politics on the industry, in which it is a part.

* * *

These will have to weigh as much as earnings and dividend yields. Stocks in companies that are strong in cash reserves and boast modern plants will sell at a premium to those not so fortunately situated. For the others will have to add to their capital to put themselves in a strong competitive position.

For these reasons too much weight should not be given to the flood of extra and increased dividends that will be paid in the next few months. They should be balanced with the other factors.

* * *

The surplus tax law will probably go down in the history books as one of the most misconceived of all the Roosevelt legislative "masterpieces." Instead of fostering recovery and putting business of the country on a sound basis, it does just the opposite.

While its authors drafted it under the delusion they were striking at the big, rich corporations, they were doing just the opposite. They were giving a "below the belt" blow to the weaker corporations that have had their reserves sapped by the long years of the depression. These cannot rebuild their reserves from earnings, which has always been the American way.

The People Pay

They Raise Every Cent That the Raw Deal Throws Away

WHEN WE BUY a loaf of bread for ten cents, we pay about eight cents for the bread. The other two cents go for taxes.

If we smoke a package of cigarettes a day we pay $22 a year in taxes. So it is in all our spending.

We cannot buy a stitch of clothing without the government's taking in taxes a part of the money we pay out. We cannot buy an ounce of food at our grocery store without being taxed to support the government.

We cannot go to a movie or a baseball game, or ride in an automobile without this invisible tax arm of government reaching out and taking part of the money we spend.

The more the government wastes, the more money it has to take from us.

—From Governor Alfred M. Landon's speech at Buffalo, N. Y., August 26, 1936.

IF GOVERNOR LANDON had made no other utterance during his speaking tour than the foregoing he, nevertheless, would have done a marked service to the American people.

He has summed up, in words of one syllable, THE REASON WHY THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WILL VOTE FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT OUT OF OFFICE NEXT NOVEMBER.

The gay, irresponsible way in which the Roosevelt Administration takes money out of EVERYBODY'S pocket and throws it to the four winds of heaven is beginning to sink into the consciousness of the public.

The public has been captivated by Mr. Roosevelt's charm of manner, by his many likable qualities.

It has been willing to assume that he MEANT well, even though his performances did not check with his promises, and his wild experimenting showed dangerous defects of balance and judgment.

But it is becoming evident to even the most thoughtless of our people that THEY are paying for his three and a half years of weird and wanton extravagance; that Mr. Roosevelt is playing ducks and drakes with THEIR money; and that the more his Administration throws away, the less THEY have to spend or save for themselves and their children.

All the hokum, hot air and claptrap that comes out of the Administration's propaganda machinery cannot disguise that simple truth.

GOVERNOR LANDON said no more at Buffalo, N. Y., than all intelligent Americans KNOW.

But he said it in words that anybody—intelligent or otherwise—is able to understand. And, in the belief of many political observers, he has won the election by this honest, common sense statement of the fact that the Raw Deal's bills are paid BY EVERY MAN AND WOMAN AND CHILD IN THE COUNTRY.

Thumbs Down for Blanton

THOMAS L. BLANTON, a New Deal congressman from Texas, has been defeated for renomination by Judge Clyde L. Garrett, a political newcomer whose platform will give little comfort to the New Dealers.

Judge Garrett advocated "more jobs and less dole," implying his belief that government oppression of private business contributes to unemployment. He also approved establishment of the merit system in the appointment of postmasters, a thought that will make jobmaster Jim Farley whistle through his teeth.

The name of Mr. Farley, incidentally, figured strongly in the defeat of Congressman Blanton. A telegram which he denies sending, but to which his name was signed, urged the re-election of Mr. Blanton.

Mr. Blanton refers to this telegram as a "frame-up," which reflects in an interesting way upon the value Democratic candidates are attaching to a Farley endorsement in this campaign.

Red Mockery on Freedom

THE MOCKERY of the brand of "freedom" attained by the people of a nation embracing Communism is attested by daily events in Russia.

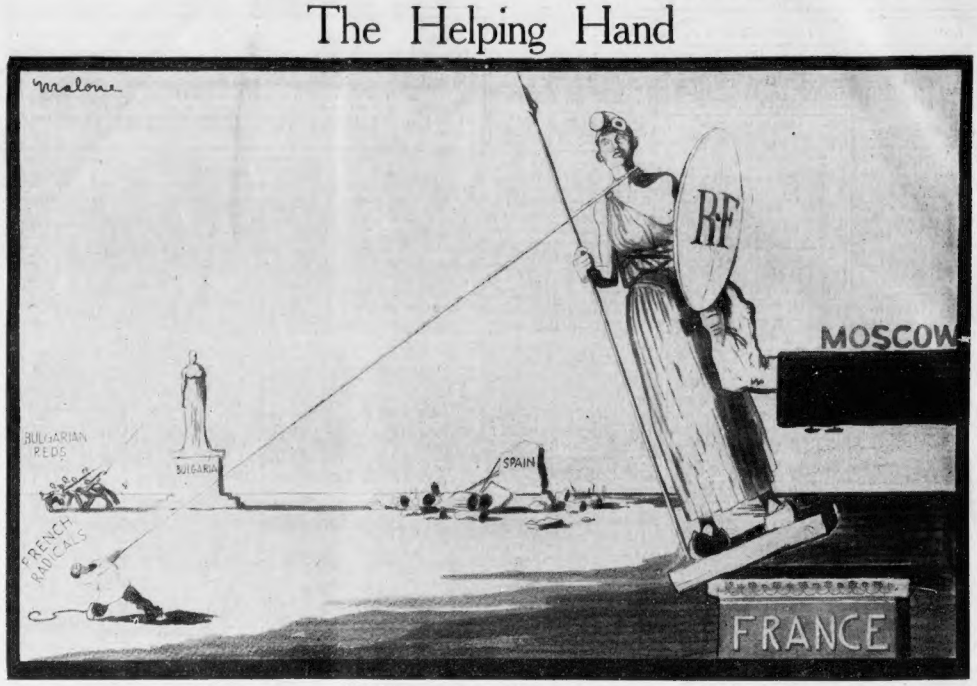
Red troops shot and killed 23 starving Russian peasants at Poltawa and wounded 50 others, when a hunger-crazed crowd stormed a military food depot.

In Russia, the peasants raise food crops, but may not keep them. At Charkow, 2,000 farmers were arrested for refusing to deliver their harvest to the military authorities.

Do we have anything in America we would care to trade for this?

By comparison, the weakest phases of our system become high privileges.

The Helping Hand



What once was Spain is a land insane,
Consumed by murderous lust.
Its ancient stones, like whitening bones,
Are strewn in the red stained dust.

Deluded France, where the Reds advance,
Is wrapped in a shroud of gloom.
It holds its breath in the fear of death
As it sways on the brink of doom.

Red Ruin reigns over stark remains
As Liberty's emblems fall,
And the helping hand of the Moscow band
Is the power behind it all.

—George E. Phair.

Saving the Eskimo

Human Side of the News

By Edwin C. Hill

THE GLOBE TROTTER OF HEARST METROTONE NEWS

Edwin C. Hill

The United States Government has gone to the rescue of 400 Eskimo families, reported starving in isolated villages along the Eastern Alaska coast. Natives were said to be eating their dogs, and their reindeer to be dying for lack of moss.

The Eskimo is a real white man's burden because the white man has made him so. The white man brought the rifle and the harpoon into the Arctic and educated the native to kill off the game for the furs. In exchange the white man gave him tobacco, liquor, gumdrops and gewgaws.

It came to pass that Mr. Eskimo could not have his cake and eat it. Nature was not able to provide enough seal, fox and muskrat to clothe the backs of several million women of the civilized temperate zones, and, at the same time, have enough left to feed the natives of the uncivilized North. As a result, facing starvation had become, up until recent years, a chronic state of the Eskimo.

Our own government, as far back as 1892, recognized this situation and began importing reindeer into Alaska from Siberia. The original importation of 1280 head has multiplied until today there are 1,000,000 reindeer in Alaska, 700,000 of which are owned by 15,000 Eskimo. Canada borrowed a leaf from this page and has 2200 head in corrals in the Mackenzie river, where they will be kept for a year.

POOREST OF POOR

It required five years to deliver the 2200 reindeer to the Canadian government over a distance of 1000 miles directly across the Arctic circle. Canada expects the reindeer will be the means of converting the Eskimos from their semi-starved status to that of a well-fed thrifty people.

In worldly goods the Eskimo is the poorest of the poor, except for his clothing. He may wear a small fortune in furs, but if he didn't he would freeze to death. A rifle, a tent and a wholehoot make up his store of treasure. Exceptions exist among the natives of Alaska and Canada, where some have gone in for radios, motor-driven boats and sewing machines.

As a moral person, the Eskimo is well-spoken of. He has one wife and the families are usually small, limited to about three children. The male is the provider and the female is the guardian and dispenser. Much of the manual labor falls upon Madam Eskimo, and one of her tasks is that of chewing the hardness out of her spouse's boots, said hardness coming from the contact of the skins with the snow and ice.

WORLD'S BEST TEETH

Speaking of chewing, the English explorer Howard Mummery wrote:

"Eskimos have the largest and finest teeth of any race, civilized or savage."

This is true, reported Dr. Leuman M. Waugh on his expedition of relief and research in 1929 except where Eskimo mothers started giving their children molasses for dessert, instead of whale oil.

"Whenever the Eskimo," said Dr. Waugh, "attempts to become a civilized man, abandoning his roving existence and his savage diet of raw flesh for foodstuffs that are rich in sugar and starch, then his teeth decay with alarming rapidity."

In Labrador Dr. Waugh extracted the tooth of a chieftain while the tribe stood about in horror. When the ceremony was over, even the victim had to admit that "it did not hurt a bit." The next day every man in the tribe was beseeching the doctor to extract all his teeth. Not that anything was wrong with the molars, quite the contrary. But all wanted them all out because each of them feared that some time or other he would have a toothache.

And above all, they feared that when that time should come, there would be not a single doctor in Labrador.

Patients did not come so easily to Dr. Waugh. Usually it was a matter of his bribing with ribbons, tobacco or chewing gum those volunteers of whose teeth and jaws he wished to obtain X-rays and plaster casts.

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

We "kide" all hated Mamie Smith.

Mamie Smith could play the piano and her Pop owned the bank. So at Christian Endeavor Sociables, Church Fairs, Fourth of July Celebrations and Graduation Exercises, Mamie Smith, sitting straight in Swiss ruffles, with her scringy hair frizzled, and her skinny legs dangling —played the piano.

But always first Mamie Smith had to be coaxed.

Coaxing Mamie Smith was as much a part of any social occasion in our town as handing out the diplomas or passing the lemonade. Everyone expected it and knew just what would happen. First, Mrs. Smith, smiling very bright and speaking very loud, would say, "Now, Mamie, darling, it's your turn; go right up, dear."

But Mamie wouldn't "go-right-up-dear" and Us Kids knew she wouldn't. She'd wait a minute until she knew FOR SURE everyone was looking. Then she'd flip her head, wobbly like, on her shoulder, the way a dead chicken does, only watching all the time . . . 'n' begin to teeter . . . 'n' twist her stummick around inside her clothes . . . 'n' bite her nails . . . 'n' get red . . . acting all the time the Big Liar, as if she'd never guessed anyone would ask her to play. When all the time she'd been practicing that silly ole "Spring Song" for weeks 'n' weeks!

CHILDREN KNEW

Then, of course, everybody would begin to whisper 'n' cough 'n' squirch around in their seats. But Mamie Smith would stand right there, twisting one leg around the other 'n' flopping her head 'n' pretending to almost cry . . . with everyone fussing 'n' pleading 'n' petting her until she got all the coaxing she wanted.

Then when everyone was clean Tuckered Out, Mamie Smith would sit down and thump the old piano.

Her Mom called it being "high strung" . . . and her Pop said she was bashful . . . but she couldn't fool Us Kids. We Kids knew Mamie Smith just wanted attention, and being coaxed was a swell way to get it. That's why we hated her—the Old Show-off!

* * *

Mamie Smith—praises be—has long since passed from the scene of my activities, but I am increasingly reminded of her as I survey the maneuvers of certain members of the human family. One barely notices these colorless creatures at first, save to pity their helplessness. But presently—without ever knowing quite how it came about—you find yourself listening to their tale of woe.

SIMPLY A RACKET

They are—and can quote a dozen best authorities to prove it—victims of an inferiority complex. They're afraid of themselves —humiliated by their own inadequacy. That's why they've never gone ahead in life. Of course, some cruel and unthinking creatures call them lazy. But they're NOT! If only they have someone who understood . . . someone with YOUR courage and experience . . .

Whereupon, unless you have the resistance of a tapeworm and the luck of all the O'Reilys, you'll find yourself taking on said sufferer as a steady job and devoting all your time, energy and spare cash to the task of—coaxing a Mamie Smith.

Those doleful dawdlers do not as you so fondly imagine, admire your strength or seek your wisdom. As a matter of fact, they usually despise your "coarse energy" and pride themselves on their shrinking refinement. But you do fill one supremely important function in their lives—YOU PROVIDE AN AUDIENCE.

They don't really want to be saved. If they did they could do the job for themselves. But they want—oh, how they want!—to be fussed over, pitied and petted, urged and exhorted to DO Their Piece. For thereby the spotlight is centered on their hungry egotism. And, like Mamie Smith, THEY DOTE ON BEING COAXED.

New York, Aug. 31—Diary: The nip of fall, my selectest season, and melancholy in the air. Came an autographed copy of the play Charles G. Norris so bravely writ for Bohemian Grove. And a jingle from Carolyn Wells about the traveling Hattie Bell Johnston. Also notes from Julian Street and Amos 'n' Andy.

So abroad, passing Maury Paul, the famed Cholly Knickerbocker, spruce in a surtout of tan with flowered cravat. Then talking to Dick Berlin about his visit to the Landons in Kansas and home to find a G. B. Shaw quip about a recent mention of his glossy beard.

Driving to Connecticut in the evening cool, stopping by Faith Baldwin's farm. And, coming on to rain, we supped at a rustic inn by lamplight and I was treated thrice to chicken dumplings. Back to the city writing moonstruck messages to Betty Rogers, Raymond Dickson and the Gilbert Whites.

New York's No. 1 stunt for sightseers is now the stupendous 37 winding miles of Triboro bridge. The most creditable civic performance the metropolis ever turned in. No one can approach or traverse it without a tingle. What might have been a complicated structure has been made marvelously simple by explicit guiding signs.

The toll keepers, alert Jimmy Cagney types, use the quarter in the slot revolver-like hoodues in the manner of the avenue buses and have been trained to a smiling courtesy, a sort of Roxy usher effect. So far, the bridge's daily intake averages $12,000.

Swing music may become the national nuisance. Certainly the vogue shows no signs of abating. The same was said of jazz. But this can be chalked up for the lift of other days: It has lost none of its charm. On a recent hodge-podge program the biggest hand went to a Gay 90 quartette singing "Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage." For an encore, it offered two modern songs and went off to scant applause.

A popular band the other night failed to hook the crowd until it rendered the "Old Gray Bonnet." There was, too, that pretentious music show that stumbled indifferently through modern song numbers and then lifted the audience to its feet by having Irene Franklin warble a rip-roaring music hall favorite.

Broadway is another street Saturday night. It's given over almost completely to Suburbia—the gentler non-pushing folk from the cottages out where the pavements end. The Paramount clock, for the only night of the week, floats up light like soda rising from a bottle. One notices a pronounced courtesy in sidewalk traffic; the jostling brashness that characterizes the street is missing. The Automats have their biggest night. Apple cheeks, gurgling laughs in contrast to the honed faces and raspy asides.

Ultra something or other: Marlene Dietrich engaging a drawing room for her trunks only. So she could change costumes frequently en route to New York.

Bagatelles: Arthur Brisbane discovered Ford Frick writing poems on a Colorado Springs newspaper and brought him to New York . . . Rae Van Buren, illustrator, started out to be a circus tumbler . . .

Paul Whiteman intends to quit dieting at 50 and go in for real eating from then on . . . Frank Ward O'Malley was once Park Row's most highly paid reporter at $125 a week . . . Cab Calloway is said to be runner up to Bill Robinson among Harlem's wealthiest . . . Major Bowes was thinking of retiring when caught up by his radio fame . . .

That's That

Great Britain and France are to appeal to Spain, "in the name of mercy-and decency," to humanize the conduct of the civil war raging within her borders. That will have as much effect as an appeal to a pack of mad dogs. There is no semblance of humanity in any war and the most atrocious of all is civil war.

According to a report of the United States Treasury, the total amount of money in circulation in this country at the end of July was $6,161,947,699. At the same time, deposits in National Banks alone amounted to a little over 26 billions dollars. How, you may ask, can 26 billions of bank deposits be paid with only six billions in cash? Obviously, such a thing isn't possible. But as long as a check drawn against bank account is as good as money, there is no reason for all depositors to demand cash at the same time.

The fact that National Bank deposits are more than four times the total amount of money in circulation gives an idea of the extent to which banking, as well as other business, is on a credit basis. The bulk of the business of this nation is transacted on credit. Check money does the work of cash, in one respect, money is like water. It's the use that benefits, and after you use a dollar, it flows on to be used over and over again by other people.

The Roosevelt party platform brags that "we have safeguarded the thrift of our citizens by insuring 50 million bank deposits." Insurance of deposits up to $5000 for each depositor has been beneficial. It has maintained public confidence in the banks. But there is a suspicion the tax spenders, when they put in this bank deposit guaranty system, were looking out for themselves as much as for the depositors.

Voters in the national election next November will vote for the man rather than the party, says Senator Lewis of Illinois. The trend has been that way for several years. As Senator Borah remarked after the Republican national convention, "the candidate is the platform." After all, it is a candidate, not the party he represents, who is elected to office. Voters should be wise to the fact by this time that the party platform declarations mainly vote bait. The thing that counts is the candidate. And his promises are important only if he has a record for keeping his word.

While there is a rapidly growing independent body of voters who are more interested in candidates than parties, there are still some who consider party the paramount thing. Senator Glass of Virginia, after a White House confer[illegible] announced he is going to [illegible] for the re-election of President Roosevelt. He doesn't like [illegible] of the New Deal policies, but he is willing to swallow anything that bears a Democratic label. Fortunately this kind of party loyalty is on the decline.
